1. OBAMUNISM:: The Tragedy of the OBAMA Presidency, Why our President Fails.

As long as the NEED for a Leader to follow be considered anything but a weakness to overcome, neither of you deserve either peace or freedom.

This is why the world is the way it is today, and how otherwise Good Men continue to do ABSOLUTELY NOTHING in the face of an Uncompromising Evil which has no justification, nor does it seek any.

ONLY one Power shapes History,just as it shapes the course of every individual life. It is the power of Ideas, rightly applied.

Good ideas will displace bad ideas, just as the Truth will displace the lies; real Politico's know that no wall is high enough, nor electric fence powerful enough to disuade a people that have been lied to and cheated out of a future worth having.

The Politico's one real power is to convince you of the NEED to follow them, and that consequently your life is not your own, that some must be sacrificed that others may live, and it is they who govern, who have Rights, as such, that you as citizen do not.

YOUR LIFE IS YOUR OWN.
This is the HELLWORLD of your own Creation.
You have the Power within you to effect Change.
You are the person we have been waiting for, and still we wait, in vain.

THERE IS NO CONFLICT
AMONG THOSE WHO DO NOT DESIRE THE UNEARNED.
EVIL HAS NO POWER WHEN THE GOOD REMAIN UNAFRAID.

The more consistent will Prevail, but any collaboration with Evil benefits NOUGHT but Evil.

As such, LIBs expect you to live in Fear for having abandoned your only means of survival, and GUILT for knowing that you have done so willingly

Had enough?
You want to save the world? Save yourself First.

DESERVE PEACE.
DESERVE FREEDOM.
DEMAND COMPETENCE.
DEMAND ACCOUNTABILITY.
DEFEAT LIB STRATEGIC INSANITY. IMPEACH OBAMA NOW.

LIBs. What Price their Vision?

A Taxpayer voting for OBAMA is like a Chicken voting for Col. Sanders...

The Tragedy of the OBAMA Presidency:: Why our president fails

As tragic as that alone is, even this is but a mere symptom of Mr. Obama's larger fundamental failure: He simply does not trust the Americans who entrusted him with the presidency....

Being Obama

What makes President Obama's executive passivity so interesting is that it seems to be a symptom not of policy uncertainty, but of personal narcissism. The president is free to delegate the tasks of the president because he's already done the important job of simply showing up.

If a World Safe for Socialism be your Goal, why WOULDN'T you BURN YOUR MONEY?

If Civilization is the process of freeing Man from other men, why do LIBs argue for its opposite?

Why shouldn't EVERYTHING be owned by EVERYONE and enjoyed by NONE.

Why shouldn't the Will of the People be in evidence everywhere (SOPA) yet existant in no one? Why settle for the Lesser Evil?

The only thing necessary for Evil to prosper is for Good Men to do ABSOLUTELY NOTHING.
But if you do ABSOLUTELY NOTHING how will you know when you are done?

When we have a world with cities ablaze, with bodies litering the streets where the dead, the Dying, the DISSENTING are carted away in boxcars that rumble night and day to smokestacks that billow without end.
http://www.strangepolitics.com/images/content/160688.jpg

LIBs. What PRICE their Vision?

LIB's plead for a Morality which holds COMPROMISE as it's standard of Value, making it possible to judge Virtue on the basis of the number of Values which one is willing to Betray.

http://www.amazon.com/Roots-Obamas-Rage-Dinesh-DSouza/dp/1596986255
THE ROOTS OF OBAMA's RAGE

The real Obama is a man shaped by experiences far different from those of most Americans; he is a much stranger, more determined, and exponentially more dangerous man than you'd ever imagined. He is not motivated by the civil rights struggles of African Americans in the 1960s those battles leave him wholly untouched. He is not motivated by the socialist or Marxist propaganda that hypnotized a whole generation of wooly minded academics and condescending liberals those concepts also leave him cold.

What really motivates Barack Obama is an inherited rage an often masked, but profound rage that comes from his African father; an anticolonialist rage against Western dominance, and most especially against the wealth and power of the very nation Barack Obama now leads. It is this rage that explains the previously inexplicable, and that gives us a startling look at what might lie ahead.

In The Roots of Obama's Rage you'll learn: Why Obama's economic policies are actually designed to make America poorer compared to the rest of the world Why Obama will welcome a nuclear Iran Why Obama sees America as a rogue nation worse than North Korea The real reason Obama banished a bust of Winston Churchill from the White House and ordered NASA to praise the scientific contributions of Muslims Why Obama would like to make America's superpower status a thing of the past

http://www.forbes.com/forbes/2010/0927/politics-socialism-capitalism-private-enterprises-obama-business-problem.html
HOW OBAMA THINKS

Barack Obama is the most antibusiness president in a generation, perhaps in American history. Thanks to him the era of big government is back. Obama runs up taxpayer debt not in the billions but in the trillions. He has expanded the federal government's control over home mortgages, investment banking, health care, autos and energy.

IT REALLY IS AS SIMPLE AS THAT.
LIB STRATEGIC INSANITY CAN AND MUST BE DEFEATED.
EVIL HAS NO POWER WHEN THE GOOD REMAIN UNAFRAID.

The Tipping Point has past, the time has come when Good Men must act in their own interests to rebuild from the rubble or forever allow LIBS to reign over the RUINS...

“We declare solemnly and confidently that the foolish politicians around the world, including the puppet group in South Korea, should not expect any change from us,'' the country’s powerful National Defence Commission, or NDC, announced in a statement read out in strident tones by a state television anchor on Friday.

Once again a very nice signal from the Voice of Korea on 11735. Superb production, crisp audio, inspirational content. Very commendable.

didn't do shit. Except get the US deep into debt. Yea look all what Obama has done. He is

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown.
Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008
FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day;
frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Phone line as SW antenna

Changes preceded by "|".

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area.
Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead.
Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including
| be rated 250 volts or higher.

Phone line RF connector
red .01 uF center cond. / \
or o--------||-----------------------------|-o | To receiver
green \ /
50 ohm coax |
ground |
or o-----------------------------------------+ N.C. shield

N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:

Phone line RF connector
red -------- center cond. / \
or o----| |-------------------------|-o | To receiver
green | | \ /
| FILTER | 50 ohm coax |
ground | | |
or o----| |----------------------------+
N.C. -------- shield
```

| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good | performance, are well-built and affordable:
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):
| Model 182A beverage matching unit

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

LOW-PASS FILTER (Rejects FM, TV, etc.)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

signal in ------- filter 1 -------- filter 2 -------- signal out

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics,

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Hello John,
Indeed it is bad news and it gives a lot of problems. The deceit of buyers by Deltron have to be published on internet in order to prevent that more shortwave listeners and Hams become the victim of the copying activities of Deltron and to find as many as possible buyers who got an imitation instead of an original product. I hope that I can find a way to replace all these copies by an original product. For me this is at the moment more important than my sales. All the correspondence and sales over my RF Systems website was handled by Deltron. After I found out that they delivered imitation products if it were RF Systems products, I have taken over the control of my website. As clearly stated in the announcement, it is not longer permitted to Deltron, to act as RF Systems, Hoogeveen or to sell RF Systems products. As soon as possible after the session on court on 12 january, I will launch a new RF Systems website and webshop. Sales will be handled by RF Systems and through some reliable dealers. It is possible that some dealers (like Universal Radio in the USA) have RF Systems products in stock, but as Deltron is not cooperating in giving information to which dealers imitation products are delivered, I have to find out first which dealers have only original products. You can understand that I am extremely busy with the juridical proces against Deltron as well as building-up a complete own sales organistation. If some buyers want to order and they know what to order, they can send a mail to the wellknown email adress info@rf-systems.nl This is also valid for repairs. Unfortunately we can only deliver after 12 january. I hope this has answered yor questions. I wish you and your family a peaceful Chrismas and a happy New Year!. Kind regards, Willem Bos, RF Systems

Hi Willem,
Sad news indeed, but please clarify for me:
1.] I take it that one should NOT buy RF Systems products from DELTRON?

2.] You do not say WHERE buyers can purchase genuine RF Systems products from in future? (and how since the website is down)

Despite all this I wish you a Merry Christmas and a good New Year

Subject: important news about RF Systems

Dear John,
First of all I like to thank you for the nice testreports you put on internet about the DX One MK 2. I hope your antennas are still working well. It is some time ago we had contact, but I have important news. For 23 years, Deltron trading was the exclusive distributor of my RF Systems products. Deltron was sold to a new owner, Henk Brink, 3 years ago. Now this has come to an end. I found first recently out, that Deltron delivers copies of RF Systems antennas. All this is explained in the attached announcement, but you can also go to the official RF Systems website: www.rf-systems.nl This caused big problems for us, because shortwave listeners and radio amateurs who have ordered a RF Systems product got a bad copy. Deltron has to come for court on 12 january 2012. They are not willing to give me the names of the buyers and dealers of fake RF Systems products. We hope that the judge will force them to give the names, but in the mean time I am spreading this news around, hoping that buyers of fake products will mail me, as i want to ask the judge to compensate them.
I know that you are active on internet forums. Please be so kind to give attention to this announcement. It will be of great help, not only for me, but also for all the shortwave listeners who have got a fake product without knowing it. Thanks in advance, good wishes for X-Mas and new year from Willem Bos, RF Systems

Reviews have been generally good on this receiver, but mixed. Eton has gotten much of its QC problems under control, so the number of poor production units is greatly reduced from their first releases in this country, but make no mistake, this is not a Drake.

And documentation is thin, so service has to be done by Eton. Self service manuals are not available.

Now, that said, the feature set is good. The design has an eye pleasing quality, and the radio is a decent radio, as far as it goes.

For the money, you could do a lot worse.

Happy New Year to me and my new radio !

I have set the AM to 10 kHz differences, the time differential to UTC minus 5. My clock time is incorrect but that is no concern to me at this time. I just want to get going.

I make sure that HOLD is pushed to the left and the key is not displayed. I press the AM/FM button. I key in 1030 (WBZ-AM at 1030 kHz is a local 50kW broadcaster), press EXE and get a display indicating that I am listening to 108.00, which is not a valid frequency selection in the US.

Where am I going wrong ?

You are likely in FM mode. Press the AM/FM button just once, and try again.

You also need to check to see if the USB/AM Sync/AM three-way switch on the side is set to the mode you want, and the USB/SSB switch on the side is set to the sideband mode that you want, if that is what you plan to listen to.

d. Peter, thanks for the input. I am web searching info on the older satellits also.

arthr-I'd read years ago about Grundig from Germany, but did not remember Portugal also.

Charly, I did head over to that blog, he's got a nice blog there.
I do go to eham's site, check their reviews, etc.

Thanks again, will post when I get something. My Kaito 1103 is a pretty good unit, I want to get something with a bit more control without spending a small fortune. I ->sometimes<- use the accessory "long wire" antenna that comes with it, and at times I use the loc/dist switch to cut back on overload. Allot of the time-probably at night-the antenna isn't needed.

I don't use an outside antenna-I still have a pole I could use from my old tv antenna (no longer have) but am open to trying that eventually if needed. I have trees around my house-30, 40+ feet high, part of my roof is metal-so will see how things go when I take the plunge...

Thanks again...

OBAMA::2012 EXPECTING DIFFERENT RESULTS!

LIBs. What FARCE their Vision?

History repeats itself, first as TRAGEDY, then as FARCE.

"to leave now we would send a message to terrorists and other potential adversaries around the world that they can change our policies by killing our people.
It would be open season on Americans."
-- Bill Clinton '93
just before he pulled out of Somalia.

To abandon this area now -- and to rely only on efforts against alQaeda from a distance -- would significantly hamper our ability to keep the pressure on al Qaeda, and create an UNACCEPTABLE RISK of additional attacks on our homeland and our allies.
-- OBAMA'09 two years before he ceded Pakistan to our adversaries and abandoned Afghanistan entirely

Most any external antenna will be an improvement. But depending on your radio, you may be subject to overload artifacts with too much antenna. Too much is far worse than too little, in fact.

20 ft of wire may be more than enough for some portables. So, you'll want to cut and try in order to get the right length/orientation/elevation for your receiver and your location.

Then, again, a sloper, or variation, may be just what you're looking for.

And, then, there's getting the signal from the antenna to the receiver, ie, the transmission line. Matching the antenna to the transmission line is quite an art form, depending on your intended bandwidth choices, and the input impedance of your receiver.

Not to create an intimidating number of choices, here, but the more problems you solve, the more you're able to find to improve performance.

The good news is that you have many resources available to you. ARRL manuals, like the Antenna book are invaluable. The Radio Handbook, The Radio Amateurs Handbook, are also novice to advanced resources. And then, there are the members of this newsgroup. DXAce has considerable experience with wire antennae, and matching transmission lines to them. Kevin has experience modelling antenna types for your conditions. Brenda Ann has experience with all manner of receivers/transmitters and antennae. And then there are the number of experimenters with the experience to guide you into new territory, with limited budgets in mind.

And experimenting is more than half the fun of the hobby.

But, that's half the fun of the hobby.

Moderates exist by begging the argument that there be NO DIFFERENCE between FOOD and POISON and that any admixture of the two Results in Anything BUT DEATH.

Moderates are the connecting tissue between the Good and the Evil, ever ready to sacrifice

the Good to the Evil, the innocent, and the unknowing to the GUILTY for Temporary political gain....

Moderates will always be swept away by the extremes, because in any competition the more consistent always prevails and Greater Evil always destroys its makers, and this fact can neither be tolerated nor ignored any further -- the stakes are simply too high.

Such would not be tolerated in a society with a long memory.

What is wrong with Deserving Peace?
What is wrong with Deserving Freedom?
What is wrong with Demanding Competance?
What is wrong with Demanding Accountability?

The World Health Organization (WHO) today classified wireless, non-ionizing radiation as "possibly cancer causing" based on a broad investigation into the peer-reviewed science, throwing a wrench into unrestrained proliferation of wireless infrastructure, particularly utility installations of "smart" meters throughout the United States. Environmental health groups immediately seized upon the declaration, saying that it has vindicated their urgent calls for precaution around wireless technology such as "smart" meters- devices that have already been linked to thousands of illnesses throughout California and elsewhere.

FOR IMMEDIATE RELEASE Contact: Joshua Hart, Director, Stop Smart Meters!
May 31st, 2011 info[at]stopsmartmeters.org

WORLD HEALTH ORGANIZATION WARNS OF CANCER FROM WIRELESS
Widening Call to Disconnect "Smart" Meter Mesh Network to Protect Public Health

The WHO"s International Agency for Research on Cancer (IARC) placed radiation from cell phones into Category 2B- the same category as DDT and engine exhaust. The finding comes as telecommunications companies and utilities worldwide rush to saturate communities with wireless technology. The WHO report now opens the door to new citizen lawsuits as well as government policies restraining placement of wireless facilities to protect human health and the environment.

"PG&E and other utilities have been citing past assurances from the World Health Organization to respond to allegations of health damaging radiation from their ill-fated "Smart" Meter program," said Joshua Hart Director of StopSmartMeters.Org. "Now that the WHO has come out and publicly confirmed that there are significant risks from wireless technology, will the utilities and regulators admit they have made a terrible mistake in deciding to roll out wireless mesh networks that are blanketing our communities with a likely carcinogen? We need to put the brakes on any further meter installation and immediately deactivate the existing networks. That is the only sensible and humane response to what has now become a growing public health emergency."

The WHO declaration adds to the pressure on state regulators to act with urgency in order to prevent exposure to high intensity EMF pulses from "smart" meters. Contrary to utility claims, the pulses are far stronger than most wireless devices in the home, and unlike a wifi router or cell phone, they cannot be turned off. According to Cindy Sage of Sage Associates, co-editor of the Bioinitiative report and author of a study on the health effects of smart meters, "Smart meters can produce RF exposures in some homes higher than those from PDAs and cell phones in the manner they are being installed and operated, and it is a continuous exposure unlike cell phones." Evidence of growing health harm has forced the CA Public Utilities Commission to require that PG&E offer an opt out program for those unwilling to be exposed, but critics say this plan falls far short of what is needed, in addition to charging people large fees- simply to protect their health.

To date, a total of 42 local jurisdictions have demanded that the California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC) halt further installation because of widespread reports of health impacts and other concerns. This list is available online at: http://stopsmartmeters.org/how-you-can-stop-smart-meters/ca-local-governments-on-board/

Lake County in California has been one of the most vociferous local governments fighting the "smart" meter program, taking out an injunction against PG&E based on violations of the California Environmental Quality Act (CEQA). County Supervisor Anthony Farrington says, "WHO"s classification should prompt the CPUC to cease installation and undertake a full environment review based on significant evidence of health risks."

Aside from cancer risks, wireless meters have been widely reported to cause headaches, dizziness, ringing in the ears- even memory loss and heart palpitations among susceptible individuals due to the constant bursts of microwave radiation. The movement against wireless meters is the sharp end of a growing movement demanding health-based standards for wireless technology.

Michael Peevey, who Gov. Brown has allowed to continue on as President of the California Public Utilities Commission (CPUC), has continually insulted individuals with sensitivities to electromagnetic radiation, inferring that they are "just making it up." Peevey, the former President and Senior Executive of Southern California Edison (SCE) has ties to the telecommunications industry, and continues as President of the CPUC that is meant to oversee the utilities, despite popular outrage about clear conflicts of interest.

The World Health Organization"s press release can be downloaded from http://www.iarc.fr/ PG&E has referred to WHO studies to justify the roll-out and safety of their smart meters. Now that WHO has identified a cancer risk from wireless technology, will PG&E deactivate their carcinogenic mesh network? PG&E Spokesperson claims safety based on WHO position starting at 1:10 in the following video: http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=7Eh8NpEmqZE

I am puzzled that old hams seem to think that using a lot of power is necessary at all times. We are supposed to use only the power necessary for reliable communications. Rock crushing is not in the manual.

I take pride in using the least amount of power possible.

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
26 December - 01 January 2012

Solar activity was at low to moderate levels. Activity was moderate on 26 December due to M-class flares from Region 1387 (S21, L = 227, class/area Dki/290 on 27 December), the largest being a M2/Sf event at 26/2030 UTC. Activity decreased to low levels during 27 - 28 December with most of the frequent C-class flares from Regions 1387 and 1389 (S23, L = 087, class/area Ekc/500 on 30 December). Activity returned to moderate levels during 29 - 31 December due to M-class flares from Region 1389. Activity decreased to low levels on 01 January with most of the flare activity from Region 1389.

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit during the period. However, a greater than 10 MeV proton flux enhancement occurred during 25 - 26 December (peak flux 3 pfu at 26/0135 UTC) associated with a M4/1n flare at 25/1816 UTC from Region 1387.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at normal levels.

The geomagnetic field was at quiet levels during 26 - 28 December.
Activity increased to quiet to unsettled levels on 29 December due to weak CME passages associated with filament eruptions observed on 25 and 26 December. Field activity decreased to mostly quiet levels during 31 December - 01 January.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
04 January - 30 January 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at low levels with a slight chance for isolated M-class activity.

No proton events are expected at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at normal to moderate levels during 04 - 07 January.
Normal flux levels are expected during 08 - 30 January.

The geomagnetic field is expected to be at quiet to unsettled levels during 04 - 06 January due to recurrent coronal hole high-speed stream effects. Predominantly quiet conditions are expected during 07 - 30 January.

The rule is the least amount of power needed to "achieve the desired communication." If that "desired communication" is good-quality voice in which subtleties of expression are clearly audible without repeats, then that necessitates more power than one would need for, say, bare-minimum exchange of signal reports on teletype or CW.
Having said that, I often have used 20 Watts or less in my amateur work when conditions allowed.

I have no idea how much power Jeff is using, but on a sometimes very noisy 75 meter band, his good field strength is very much appreciated.

With every good wish,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

82. Teaching "The Planets, Atmosphere, The Regulated Purpose Of The Moon, The Sun, And Different Hemispheres, Did Not Just Happen" 1-4-94

This Teaching says,
"Logic tells us wrong is wrong, right is right, and there is A Higher Being we must all report to, for our behavior in life."

TEACHING DELIVERED THROUGH FRANCES M. KLUG ON JANUARY 4,1994 AT 10:15
A.M.

“The planets, atmosphere, the regulated purpose of the moon, the sun, and different hemispheres, did not just happen. How did it all begin? How come scientists, meteorologists, historians, have such limited accounts of the past great occurrences? Also, how did mankind cross the barriers of generations that included the cave man and generations of prehistoric, historical episodes that we have heard took place, but we have such limited knowledge and understanding of how one led into the other, creating what we have today?

Great dramatic changes forced and enforced a new period of life, circumstances, progress, and a tremendous amount of questions left unanswered.

The next question is, are there really aliens from outer space? If so, according to many reports, they all seem to refer to the same type of physical appearance, and also, many relate to some pretty bizarre experiences.

History tells us stories of Noah hearing God speak, and Noah accepting the order to do specific things. Moses was elected by God to accept the command of God’s Commandments. Neither of these men knew the full magnitude of their responsibilities, and obedience to act without question.

For 2,000 years Christianity has been an important issue, plus, it has strengthened mankind morally, physically, mentally and spiritually.

We have also learned through writings that generations of mankind failed to respect, respond and/or follow the Directions that were so obviously important, good, and beneficial to the physical life and future life for their Soul.

Mary and Joseph are written about, but in such ordinary and yet unordinary reference. This was another important time in history, thus instructing mankind in the importance of spiritual obedience to a formal dignified attention to Purity, plus the necessity to see right from wrong, good from evil, plus the beginning of Christianity that was to be the foundation for the men who walked with Christ, to be the strength to form a pattern of understanding that the physical life had purpose, goal and responsibility.

Logic tells us wrong is wrong, right is right, and there is A Higher Being we must all report to, for our behavior in life.

In the last 2,000 years, God has encouraged mankind to see civilization as a Gift from Him, by giving mankind, at different times, a refresher course on the importance of spiritual understanding, and the Goal He intended for human life.

True Mystics are not in the category of people who create their own so-called supernatural expertise. ‘A True Mystic is more aware of seeing the necessity to step back and wait for Orders, and very much aware of the difference between personal opinion and opinion in What is being Directed through their Soul.’ There have been several True Mystics since the time of Christ and each one had a particular purpose.

The Miracle Of Saint Joseph is a Teaching Miracle. Each Lesson is like weaving the Words together in such a manner that is understandable to all degrees of intellect and all cultures. It leaves no room for intellectual interpretation because everything is said or written understandable to all types of people. The spontaneity of the Subject Matter is a Miracle unto itself.

For many, many years, Roman Catholics were asked, told, to not read the Bible because it was difficult to correctly interpret the meaning of the quotes. This was logical, because one liners sometimes leave out the subject, or when translated, lose the full concept of the real meaning. Many people now carry the Bible and interpret it to their own degree of understanding."

So when is the experiment finally going to OFFICIALLY be declared a failure and cease to exist? When are ALL station managers throughout the nation going to stop broadcasting in HD? We've been reading what a disaster it is for years but it still hasn't gone away. Why?

I still can't listen to 1120 (KMOX), 840 (WHAS), et.al. because the HASH is so intrusive. Even to the point of interfering with adjacent stations on the dial. Don't the decision makers realize they are driving away listeners in droves? As if the internet hasn't depleted their audiences enough they have to throw gas on the fire to hasten their demise. It appears to be a terminal case of falling in love with your toys coupled with an inability to acknowledge one's mistake.

CD-Quality sound. That sounds like the same nonsense we had with DAB advertising.

Surely it is technically impossible for HD radio to provide CD quality sound. (DAB could technically provide near CD quality sound, but here in the UK, no DAB transmissions actually provide it, and most are way way below CD quality).

"DAB radio: now you hear it, now you don't"

"This would not be the first time that the marketing of DAB radio in the UK has come under legal scrutiny for potentially misleading consumers. In 2004, Ofcom banned an advertisement broadcast on London station Jazz FM which had claimed falsely that DAB radio offers consumers CD-quality sound. In 2005, the Advertising Standards Authority upheld a complaint against DAB multiplex owner Switchdigital for a misleading radio advert which had claimed that DAB radio was distortion free and crystal clear."

At least in the UK, the DAB liars got called out for their false claims. iBiquity uses the same dishonest tactics as the DAB folks. It also appears that iBiquity has enlisted the help of that liar James Cridland to shill for HD Radio. iBiquity has been under investigation for about a year by two law firms looking to file class-action lawsuits.

Well I think we are a few years further along the road than you are.
They did get away with calling it CD quality, for a while.

Pretty twisted in some ways, bearing in mind, that DAB can support bit rates of up to 320k, and so can provide near CD quality.

However it has been many years since they provided even good sound quality. With the possible exception of Radio 3, which is the only station to use 192k, but even that is a far bit less than CD quality.

I'm not sure whether Cridland is actually a liar. I think he just has a tenancy to talk about things that he doesn't fully understand.

Liberty Net: December 31, 2011

http://3950.net/2012/01/liberty-net-december-31-2011/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

JUST ONE OF THE AMAZING things youï¿½ll hear on this weekï¿½s Liberty Net recording is the live transmission of automatic weapons and shotguns being fired in a Detroit neighborhood at midnight on New Yearï¿½s eve.

The initial launch of our own live chat and audio feed was a success and we continue the experiment this week. While we experiment with this new feed and chat, we will not be using the old Stickam page. If you canï¿½t check in over the air, please use our new live feed at:

http://3950.net/live

The discussions and debates promise to be as intense as ever as we celebrate the 38th anniversary of our historic net. Hereï¿½s a small sample of what youï¿½ll hear on the latest recording:

ï¿½ As trillions of computer-generated ï¿½dollarsï¿½ are being illegally created out of nothing to prop up failing foreign banks in the EU, some European countries are preparing for the possible implosion and abandonment of the Euro: Germany has now joined the club and started to print Deutschmarks again, though they havenï¿½t been issued yet. (49 minutes)

ï¿½ More than 70,000 people have dropped GoDaddy as their domain and Web hosting provider because that company supports the governmentï¿½s misnamed SOPA (ï¿½Stop Online Piracy Actï¿½) and PIPA (ï¿½Protect Intellectual Property Actï¿½), which are just censorship power grabs under innocent-sounding names. (53 minutes)

ï¿½ The rise of the free Internet is even more important to human freedom of thought than was the Gutenberg press ï¿½ all the more reason to defeat all corporate and government efforts to control it. (58 minutes)

ï¿½ Joseph Lieberman ï¿½ who is a strong supporter of Internet censorship and ï¿½indefinite detentionï¿½ ï¿½ is now pushing the idea that anyone who joins or helps any foreign military should lose his US citizenship. Lieberman wants one exception, though ï¿½ there would be no consequences whatsoever for those who join the Israeli killing machine. (1 hour 13 minutes)

ï¿½ The state of Michigan is reviewing the possibility of taking over Detroit in a probably hopeless effort to stem its racially-linked bankruptcy, violence, chaos, and decline. (1 hour 17 minutes)

ï¿½ Could Black people solve their own social problems if they were truly independent? ï¿½ if their leadership was chosen without the influence of the controlled, ethnically-distinct, mass media? Should we ask the same questions about White people? (1 hour 25 minutes)

ï¿½ In just one county in Arizona, over 44,000 violent illegal Mexican criminals were arrested by one sheriff alone. Now the US ï¿½Justice Departmentï¿½ has tied the sheriffï¿½s hands and forced him to stop such arrests ï¿½ and release the criminals. Multiply this situation by thousands of counties and you can get an idea of the magnitude of the problem we face. (1 hour 33 minutes)

Remember that you can receive the Liberty Net on an open frequency around ï¿½ usually well above ï¿½ 3950 kHz every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time. You can also listen live on the Internet via the new experimental chat and audio feed at http://3950.net/live or listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted right here at http://3950.net every week.

The complete net recording is posted at the very top of the right column (under ï¿½Liberty Net Audioï¿½) here on http://3950.net ï¿½ usually on the Sunday immediately following the net, so look for it there if youï¿½d like to listen or download after the net has signed off. The articles and summaries (like this one, found in the center column) show up around a week later.

Once again, thanks to W1WCR and all participants for making this extraordinary net possible ï¿½ and please check in!

HD (aka IBOC) radio in the USA:

For the general public has to compete along with traditional analog radio against satellite radio, portable mp3 players, and Internet radio.

Automobile drivers have decided satellite wins hands down IF the subscription price is not an issue for the listener.

MP3 players win for the rest.

IBOC in New York City Metro survives on a handful of AM stations, many more on FM with multiple sub channels, the FM sub channels being used to simulcast their AM sister stations, ethnic or alternate programming.

Bottom line IMHO, its the programming content, not the technology that is killing free radio.
It they had something on free radio that people wanted to listen to then the technology would be embraced. Crap is crap no matter what you wrap it in.

The rare BCB DXer or tech-know-geek is not in this horse race.
Hardware price is no longer an issue with so many fire sales on IBOC enabled radios.

I can't speak for NYC, but in the San Francisco Bay Area it's the digital technology that's making terrestrial radio palatable at all. There are several HD2 stations, including the only decent jazz station on HD2.

Cost of the receivers is not an issue, there are so many different models available now and the cost adder is only around $10. A bigger issues is that on newer vehicles you can't easily replace the stock head unit.

I agree to some extent. If the content is cr*p, then not many people will want to listen to it.

However I don't agree that this is the only factor.
In fact I think the most important factor is that people are content with what they can already get on FM, and although FM is not perfect, it does at least work well enough the vast majority of the time.

Also, with digital radio, I do think that technical factors could affect whether people listen. If the audio keeps cutting out, then that will put a lot of people off. Also if the sound quality is very poor, then I do believe that will put a fair number of people off.

Except that vehicle manufacturers tend to want to fit the cheapest car stereo they can get away with, and an ordinary AM/FM receiver, is still cheaper than a digital radio.

That may be the case in the UK, and for very low end vehicles in the U.S., but at least in the U.S., one way manufacturers distinguish similar vehicles is with components like the sound system. The price adder for the manufacturer for adding digital radio is very low, $5-10. Higher end manufacturers simply add it, BMW is not going to lose sales to Volvo, Cadillac is not going to lose sales to Lincoln, etc., over a feature that costs very little to include. It's like leaving out cup-holders.

My 70 year old next door neighbor just got a new Ford Taurus and yesterday she spent an hour in the car while her daughter taught her how to use the optional navigation system and the optional Ford Sync system with HD Radio. I told her that now she needs a smart phone to link to Sync system. I was rather surprised that she got those options since she only drives about 8000 miles per year and doesn't drive on long trips.

One thing that's changed is that people are keeping their vehicles longer and are willing to spend a little extra up front for something they are going to live with for ten years, and those with older vehicles that still have a DIN or double DIN opening for a head unit are willing to replace it with something with more capability, not just digital radio, but Bluetooth, iPod control, AUX-In, etc..

A fairly recent issue I stumbled across on aftermarket upgrading auto radios is the CAN_BUS linkage of just about anything, including the radio, to the rest of the the electronics in the car.
It creates a whole new headache above and beyond getting the replacement radio to fit in the opening and matching the wiring harness.

That's right, and the few high-end replacement units that have CAN capability are not cheap. When you buy a new car these days you'd better get the features you want at the time of purchase since you're not going to be able to add them on later.

Manufacturers need to be careful to not lose sales to a competitor that includes capabilities that they try to charge extra for. It's sometimes amazing what consumers will focus on when choosing one vehicle over another. From the design of cup holders, to the audio system, when you're deciding between very similar vehicles at similar cost, these things make a difference.

They really do need to kill AM IBOC. I could handle waiting a few

Yes, AM IBOC should be ended. There's no future for AM anyway, and whenever you see complaints (valid) about digital radio it's about AM, not FM. Many AM stations are already doing simulcasting on FM HD, and this will increase as digital radio receivers continue to gain market share.

Digital radio is very big at this year's CES with about 60 new products. But it's FM where the value is in digital radio.

While the digital radio receivers can be considered a consumer product, digital radio is very different than something like a tablet computer, and you have to take a big-picture view. Digital radio requires thousands of radio stations to commit to new broadcasting technology, something that historically has taken decades after a new broadcasting technology is announced to become mainstream. Whenever you see any consumer product compared to an iPod or iPad and then proclaimed a failure because it hasn't sold in comparable quantities, you have to shake your head and wonder if the person doing the comparison is simply clueless or if they have an agenda.

It's difficult to sell receivers until broadcasters sign on, and it's difficult to get broadcasters to sign on until there's an installed base of receivers. You really need broadcasters that look at the big picture and take a long term view, and unfortunately a lot of smaller broadcasters don't do this.

Because it's NOT going away. HD radio is here to stay on FM.

AM is a different story...but AM is dying a slow death anyway.

I still can't listen to 1120 (KMOX), 840 (WHAS), et.al. because the

Where are you trying to listen to them? Someone living in Australia can't hear them either.

There is no evidence to suggest that they are "drivi9ng listeners away in droves". Most (if not all) listeners do not notice any difference.

Actually I'm not sure, but in the past there have been broadcasts in foreign countries, at up to 320k, and never at any bit rate higher than that. Also I thought the limit for mp2 was 320k, but I might be wrong about that.

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
02 - 08 January 2012

Solar activity was low during most of the period with occasional low-level C-class flares. A long-duration C2 x-ray event was observed at 02/1524 UTC from just beyond the west limb. Associated with this event was a greater than 10 MeV proton flux enhancement at geosynchronous orbit (see below). Region 1390 (N08, L=122, class/area Dao/210 on 06 January) produced a C1 x-ray event at 05/0722 UTC with an associated Type II radio signature (695 km/s shock velocity). There were no Earth-directed CMEs observed during the period.

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit. However, a greater than 10 MeV proton flux enhancement began late on 02 January and ended late on 03 January (peak flux 1 pfu at 03/0550 UTC). The enhancement was associated with the long-duration C2 x-ray event mentioned above.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at normal levels.

Geomagnetic field activity was at quiet to unsettled levels during the period. Brief minor storm periods occurred at high latitudes on 05 January associated with the onset of a coronal hole high-speed stream (CH HSS).

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
11 January - 06 February 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at low levels during the period with a slight chance for isolated M-class flare activity.

No proton events are expected at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at normal levels during the period with a chance for moderate levels during 14 - 16 January and again on 30 January - 01

February.

Geomagnetic field activity is expected to be at quiet levels during 10 January. An increase to quiet to unsettled levels is expected on 11 - 12 January and 16 January due to recurrent CH HSS effects. Quiet conditions are expected during 17 - 27 January. An increase to quiet to unsettled levels is expected on 28 - 29 January due to another CH HSS. Quiet levels are expected from 30 January - 06 February.

LOL.

In the real world of radio what matters in terms of audio quality is what radio listeners perceive. There have been extensive tests comparing perceived audio quality of the different digital sources.

The iBiquity codec is based upon the AAC+ (HE-AAC) codec. "Scientific testing by the European Broadcasting Union has indicated that HE-AAC at 48 kbit/s was ranked as "Excellent" quality using the MUSHRA scale.[8]
MP3 in the same testing received a score less than half that of HE-AAC and was ranked "Poor" using the MUSHRA scale. Data from this testing also indicated that some individuals confused 48 kbit/s encoded material with an uncompressed original." Look at figure 9 at <http://www.ebu.ch/fr/technical/trev/trev_305-moser.pdf>.

Also read
<http://www.nrscstandards.org/Reports%20ref%20docs/iBiquity%20Gen%203%20report/FM%20IBOC%20subj%20eval.pdf>.
You can see where "near CD quality" came from in figure 3.2. As that report shows, the big problem with analog radio, is in impaired conditions. Unimpaired, some analog radio was only a bit below the quality of digital. Impaired, digital fared far better than analog because of the multipath on FM analog. Of course the big problem is that in impaired conditions, at 10% power, it would be difficult to even receive the HD signal. That's why it's so important for radio stations to increase their digital power.

Where we need to move to is FM HD Radio in pure digital at higher power. It's the best transition to digital (at least the best one that anyone has come up with), that preserves the present FM band during the transition. It's time for the FCC to set some dates.

The consumer electronics industry has made a huge commitment to digital radio, as evidenced by this years CES. Now it's the broadcasters turn to take advantage of the increased penetration of digital receivers, and increase power levels. The stations that have not yet added digital service need to get with the program as well.

Since the iBiquity codec is based upon but not is the AAC+ (HE-AAC) codec, it is not valid to use tests on the original AAC+ (HE-AAC) codec as evidence that the iBiquity codec its-self delivers quality.

iBiquity tweaked the AAC+ Codec to improve it for radio. So while the iBiquity Codec is going to sound better than the generic AAC+ Codec, it's not going to be orders of magnitude better. Hence the tests of AAC+ do apply to the iBiquity Codec, just realize that the iBquity Codec is a bit better.

In any case, other tests, of the iBquity Codec confirm the results in terms of sound quality.

The most detailed test that compared a CD source versus digital radio at various bit rates was conducted by Sheffield Audio Consulting and prepared for NPR.

<http://www.nrscstandards.org/DRB/Non-NRSC%20reports/NPRmultiple_bit_rate_report.pdf>. See Table 5.2.1 on page 11. The test methodology is in the appendix.

There are valid reasons to be opposed to digital radio, and I have posted those in the past. Audio quality is not one of the reasons. Every test by every testing entity, whether a double-blind test or just the opinion of the reviewer, has shown that the "near CD quality" is not just marketing hype, but is actually true.

I would caution you against falling in with the likes of Mr. Farce who has demonstrated his lack of knowledge about broadcasting in general and digital radio in particular.

Disclosure: I'll classify myself along with Mr Farce, as my knowledge of broadcasting ended in about 1972. I know just enough to be dangerous.

I was doing some Googling the codec and found this item for 2003.

"Last-minute change casts doubt on U.S. digital radio spec" <http://www.eetimes.com/electronics-news/4045254/Last-minute-change-casts-doubt-on-U-S-dig ital-radio-spec>
The National Radio Standard Committee (NRSC) questioned the audio quality of iBiquity's original low-bit-rate PAC codec in May and then suspended its standards-setting process, with committee members bluntly saying they did not consider the audio quality of the proprietary 36-kbit/second codec fit for prime time.

Oops. Well, that's been fixed, but the early history of the codec selection is rather interesting.

You need to read a bit further in the article you quoted:

"Their concerns center mainly on digital AM broadcasts, where critics point to questionable audio performance, sparse coverage and interference with adjacent analog channels."

I don't think anyone here would argue that digital AM is a waste of time and that there are valid concerns about it. Interference is a real possibility on AM, though as we've seen even in ba.broadcast there's a tendency for some people that are philosophically opposed to digital radio to attribute _any_ AM interference to AM HD, even when the accused AM station isn't even broadcasting in HD!

As I stated, there are valid reasons to be opposed to digital radio but the quality of the audio on FM digital radio is not one of those reasons.

Note the word "mainly". There apparently were also concerns over FM quality.

Unlikely. It's just a weasel word inserted by the author. If there were concerns about FM quality then they would have raised them. You can see by the independent tests of audio quality that FM digital consistently ranks much higher in quality than FM analog. Perhaps the concern on FM was that they thought "near CD quality" wasn't enough and they wanted better than CD quality.

IBOC will become accepted {Standard} when the FCC Mandates that all new AM/FM Radios built for the US Market are IBOC Compliant and have Plug-N-Pay SAT Radio built-in.

You write in an Orwellian Newspeak in which IBOC becomes "digital radio."

The truth is that IBOC is a pathetically poor excuse for digital radio in the same sense that a plastic ring from a Crackerjack box is a poor excuse for a precious gem. And that is the real issue here.

If we had real digital radio, and we don't, there would be no such thing as "AM digital" or "FM digital." There would only be digital radio -- in a dedicated band with all licensees having full-quieting, and full-time, and full-fidelity signals with bandwidth to spare.

That, of course, is exactly what the money men did _not_ want.

So they did everything in their power to prevent it.

They were selfish and criminal, to be sure. But worse, they were stupid. Their IBOC system, designed to preserve the "superiority" of the big stations owned by the money men by continuing and accentuating the inferiority of the small stations' signals, is pretty much a retarded turkey that few have heard of and that no one wants. It rings a pathetic and hokey death knell for radio broadcasting.

With every good wish,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

IBOC is a temporary compromise. Eventually analog will be turned off and HD Radio will be all digital.

You have to look at the big picture and recognize the practical considerations in moving from analog to digital, including the business considerations. We've seen how well creating a new digital band worked--it didn't.

We'll have to live with analog and digital co-existing, and the problems that causes, for at least another decade.

No one ever claimed that it was. Even digital radio is really not for audiophiles, though some would argue that CDs aren't for audiophiles either, though historically attempts to sell higher definition audio and video to those that appreciate it have failed. Witness Elcassette, Minidisc, and DVD-A.

Perhaps, though education is preferable to compulsion. iBiquity has educated most auto manufacturers as to the desirability of HD Radio, something that wasn't easy given HD coverage of stations that haven't upped their power.

Ah, yes... yet another denial of service to rural users of the media, just like HD(?*)TV has been. I guess if you don't live in a core city area, you just don't count (sort of like if you're over 50).

opting for 720p with an additional channel or two. The ones with 5 side

"better" than good old NTSC analog (and you could still receive the analog signal at a distance, which you cannot do with ATSC.)

If broadcast radio ever goes all digital, it'll be a completely

If that's true, the real trick will be to switch to pure digital DAB, without destroying the investments of the existing IBOC stake holders.
If you just spent $250,000 on an FM HD Radio conversion, you're not going to be thrilled with tossing it all away just to go pure digital.
Similarly, I doubt if IBiquity has any interest in a technology that would obsolete their existing technology. Unless they could somehow own the all digital solution, I doubt if they're going to be very helpful.

I have looked at the big picture. See above and below.

Maybe. I predict that the FCC will backpedal on their restrictions for the station not being able to lease the HD1 and HD2 channels, and possibly remove the restrictions on data broadcasting, for no better reason that to prevent the stations from abandoning the whole mess.

Incidentally, there's another nightmare pending, that oddly involves yet another potential source of GPS interference. In EU, the official future all digital broadcast band is 1452 to 1492 MHz. There's no hardware, and several countries are just sitting on the spectrum, but that's the official ITU dictated direction for S-DAB. Details: <http://www.plumconsulting.co.uk/pdfs/Plum_June2011_Benefits_of_1.4GHz_spectrum_for_multim edia_services.pdf>
Note that the band is listed as "unavailable" in the US. That's because the military is sitting on the frequencies in the US. So much for the US following ITU recommendations (WARC-92).

In my never humble opinion, this will also be the direction the FCC will push DAB in the future, especially if they can auction off the frequencies and sell overpriced licenses.

The problem is that it very close to the GPS frequency bands. It won't be a problem if it's a satellite only DAB service. However, if it follows the Sirius/XM model of using terrestrial repeaters, it's going to trash GPS exactly in the same manner and LightSquared.

No, the official EU digital (radio +) band is 174-240 MHz. The 'L-band' you mentioned has been used for digital radio, but it is not suitable for terrestrial distribution because the frequencies are too high. There now remain a few transmissions from satellite and just a few thousand receivers scattered around the continent. I wonder what will happen to the frequency allocation in 2012.

Rural residents willingly give up certain services because the cost of providing the services is prohibitive. No piped natural gas, often no cable TV, often no sewers. There are workarounds at higher cost. For radio there is satellite radio versus terrestrial radio.

Rural radio stations can provide digital service if they desire.

What's lost with digital AM is the ability to receive distant stations, but that was never guaranteed to either the stations or the listeners.

And here's what you're missing. This is a survey of a general population. Of which many will be audiophiles. Many will be audio neutral. Many will be tone deaf. And many will simply not understand what they're hearing well enough to give a meaninful answer.

Many of audiophiles have spent tens of thousands of dollars in hardware, and can tell the difference between a high bit mp3 and a full bandwidth CD reject out of hand the forced acceptance of low bit audio simply because those who don't know, don't hear, and don't care, accept the performance of HD radio as high quality, based on untrained perception.

Low bit mp3s do not, will not and cannot be made to sound as detailed, as clean, or as ear pleasing to those who know the difference as what's currently in place, even when processed to death. And there is no perceptual market place study of those who don't know, don't hear, or don't care which will change that.

These perceptions are not reality.

And those of use who can hear the difference, take offense at the reduction in audio quality that's being rammed down our throats by a company that takes the perceptions of those without discriminating ears as defacto proof that their marketing claims are truth.

The fact is that HD radio does NOT perform as claimed. And there's no mass marketing perception that will change that reality.

HD radio is a fraud perpetrated on the public by a company looking to make a killing on a technical claim that the public doesn't understand, and is largely unaware of.

The "standard" for North American terrestrial transmissions is 1080i not 1080p, or as you say 720p@60.

The bandwidth of the UHF channels (6 MHz) is inadequate for 1080p@60.

A possible compromise is 1080p@30, or for movies 1080p@24 but not terrestrial TV transmissions in North America use this mode.
See the list of official ATSC modes at

<http://www.hdtvprimer.COM/ISSUES/what_is_ATSC.html>

In Europe where the mains frequency is 50 Hz as opposed to the North American 60 Hz, the TV norm is similarly 50 Hz, and the equivalent resolutions are 1080p@25 and 1080p@50.

Again because there is not sufficient bandwidth for 1080p@50, broadcasters use either 720p@50 or 1080i. The BBC on terrestrial transmissions has started dynamically switching the transmission mode on their BBC HD station from 1080i to 1080p@25 and back when it is appropriate for picture content (material recorded on location as opposed to studio content).

<http://www.reghardware.COM/2011/05/23/bbc_hd_1080p/>

This caused a problem for some SONY televisions.

<http://www.engadget.com/2011/05/23/bbc-hd-quietly-begins-broadcasting-in-1080p-but-not-al l-sony-hd/>

A check on Wikipedia reveals that some North American stations on satellite do broadcast 1080p@24 or 1080p@30 as appropriate.

Please note that the maximum resolution supported by BluRay is 1080p@24, or 1080i@50 or 1080i@60, bit not 1080p@50 or 1080p@60.

I can't predict what will happen in Europe, but in the US, I think 1.5Ghz would be a likely place to move digital radio. How it will be organized and structured is beyond the abilities of my crystal ball.

As for being unsuitable for terrestrial, please note that Sirius is using 2320 to 2332.5MHz and XM at 2332.5 to 2345MHz. While allegedly a satellite based DAB system, much of the urban coverage is via terrestrial repeaters, primarily to deal with "urban jungle" building blockage. If 2.3Ghz works, certainly 1.5Ghz will also work.

Sirius repeater map:

Big businesses also favor this because it means that instead of people listening for free to the public airwaves because they can charge for every kilobyte received regardless of the content.

Remember, monetizing whatever was formerly available for free

Ironically, broadcasters are the most frequently guilty of attempting not to pay for the products they use to make their money.

I've only had a rental car with satellite radio once, but I was amazed at how poor satellite radio performed. There apparently is little buffering, so if I were under an overpass for more than a few seconds the signal would be lost. The audio quality was mediocre. Maybe satellite radio is good for Howard Stern, but not for music. I thought that maybe the GM car I had simply had a sound system that didn't do satellite radio justice. I see a lot of complaints about satellite radio signal loss and audio quality, i.e. "their quality isn't even FM Quality."

What is the bit rate for XM/Sirius music channels? I've seen people say that it's as low as 32 kb/s, but that their streaming is 128 kb/s. But if you're streaming, you may as well get Pandora rather than satellite.

"I just thought I would give you guys the heads up for those who are interested. The increased audio quality of XM in my car (via streaming through my phone) has allowed me to re-discover and enjoy the music XM offers. If only they could bump up the quality though their actual satellite service..."

So now this person is paying for unlimited data on their phone PLUS an XM subscription.

Sirius uses a dual distribution system, with satellite and terrestrial.
In Europe they tried to use L-Band for terrestrial-only and that doesn't work. You simply needed too many repeaters, making the system too expensive.

Satellite broadcasting does not work in Europe because there are many markets. They are too small to make them viable targets. Band III systems need less transmitters and can easily be split into many markets. The end of analog TV freed up significant portions of the band for digital radio (and other services sharing the multiplexes). Digital TV is moving to UHF-only in many countries, even in less airspace than before because governments want to cash in on frequencies for mobile internet. No significant use has been decided (yet) for Band I frequencies.

Funny that you say that, because they use an average of about 46 kbps, which is actually over the average used for HD radio. That this is not adequate to match FM is what we are trying to tell you for some time now.

Broadcast radio station owners are living in a dream world if they think listeners are going to put up with commercials and use their metered smart phone data to listen to the radio.

If people pay for each kb of data then they'll subscribe to the paid version of a Pandora-like service.

> Remember, monetizing whatever was formerly available for free

Well to be fair, radio isn't really free, it's paid for by advertising. Nor has wireless bandwidth been free, it was just originally "too cheap to meter" at least for what most users were able to consume.

Broadcast radio station owners should be thrilled that most of the wireless companies are not offering unlimited data any more, and that the ones that are prohibit streaming. This highlights broadcast radio's value advantage.

And yet, it happens every day. Not all data plans are as metered as you think. And many smartphones have wi-fi provisions, so a local network may be accessed. Couple that with spreading of community wi-fi networks that are free for access, a good number of listeners do exactly what you deny: they're putting up with commercials while listening on their smartphones.

Also, not true. I can stream at will on my unlimited plan for my iPhone.

Where did you get the idea that HD averages less than 46 kbps? If it's HD1 only then it's 96 kbps. If there are sub-channels they divide that up, but unless they have more than one sub-channel, the average could not be less than 48 kbps.

Also remember that once analog is turned off there will be 300 kb/s to be divided up among the channels.

In any case, there's no contest between the quality of audio on satellite radio and HD Radio, HD Radio is far better. The difference is in coverage. HD Radio coverage is very limited on stations that have not taken advantage of the power increase.

Most stations use subchannels. There are very few stations using more than 48 kbps. The difference between 46 and 48 kbps or something like that will be hard to notice.
Of course the smart thing to do would be to use the digital for a second service only and leave the first one on FM (for now). For instance an owner of an AM and an FM station might simulcast the AM on the HD at 96 kbps to lure the audience over. The big saving would come when the AM can be switched off. The FM would of course benefit when the FM goes as well and the bandwidth goes up. A third station could be added then.

Of course, but that is of no use at all for now and many years to come.

Bitrates are similar, sound is similar. I tried both. There are a few positive exceptions though, indeed some of the ones transmitting just one service.

48kbps is where listeners are react overwhelmingly favorable to HD. See section 3.3.3 at <http://www.nrscstandards.org/DRB/Non-NRSC%20reports/NPRmultiple_bit_rate_report.pdf>.
If you look at tables 5.2.1 and 5.2.2, you see that the big drop-off in perceived quality is below 36 kbps.

Satellite radio is going well below 48kbps, down into the bit rates where listeners are much more negative about digital audio. See <http://www.hydrogenaudio.org/forums/index.php?showtopic=64686>. Only two music stations are at 64kbps, most are at 24, 32, and 40 kbps.

The endless complaints about the audio quality on satellite radio apparently do have a basis in fact. You never see any complaints about HD audio quality.

On HD Radio, the frame of reference for comparison is FM analog radio, and HD sounds much better than analog FM under most circumstances, whereas on satellite radio, apparently many subscribers expected it to compare to CD quality, maybe because they are paying so much for it.

It's ugly. There are 100 streams, each 8Kbits/sec. With two channels, they're effectively 4Kbits/sec per channel. These are conglomerated in the receiver into anything between 4 and 64Kbits/sec.
For music, it seems to hang around the upper end, but I'm not sure.
<http://www.google.com/patents/US7075946?dq=7075946>
I had XM in my car several years ago when they were giving away 30 days free trials. Coverage in the San Lorenzo Valley was horrible due to trees, hills, and lack of terrestrial repeaters. The nearest are two in San Jose.

I found a chart here <http://www.xm411.com/phpbb/viewtopic.php?t=33127>. It's nearly four years old, but since the satellite radio providers obviously don't want to talk about bit rates, it'll have to do. It's pretty clear where the complaints of audio quality on satellite are coming from. Much lower than even free Pandora in most cases. I can only imagine the kind of stuff we'd see posted here if digital terrestrial radio tried to get away with some of those bit rates for music. I can just imagine some of the radio conglomerates thinking about three 32 kbps digital music channels (or seven once analog is turned off).

What's amazing is that after coming close to failing, satellite radio in the U.S. is now doing okay financially (not great, but the threat of bankruptcy is over) so obviously there are many consumers for whom audio quality is of minimal importance. They even raised prices recently. I could buy a couple of hundred music CDs at garage sales for what it cost for satellite radio for a year.

On long trips we like to listen to audio books, and most libraries have a very good selection.

Liberty Net: January 7, 2012

http://3950.net/2012/01/liberty-net-january-7-2012/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

SOMETIMES OUR CONVERSATIONS, both on and off amateur radio, seem like a vast wasteland of empty chatter, small talk, and gossip ï¿½ but that canï¿½t be said of the conversations on the historic Liberty Net. Some of the most aware and articulate people Iï¿½ve ever known are regulars there. Taking part in Liberty Net conversations is a direct connection to bright minds and new perspectives ï¿½ perspectives that often are suppressed or vilified by the billionairesï¿½ media.

Hereï¿½s a small sample of what youï¿½ll hear on our latest recording:

ï¿½ The protests arenï¿½t just on Wall Street: In Israel ï¿½ on Rothschild Boulevard, no less ï¿½ one of the protestors against the financial oligarchs, many of whom have connections to that country, actually erected a guillotine. (18 minutes)

ï¿½ Only 13 senators had the courage to vote against the outrageously illegal so-called ï¿½National Defense Authorization Actï¿½ (NDAA), which strips us of our most fundamental constitutional rights. There is a patriotic movement afoot to have the 86 who voted for it removed from office. (22 minutes)

ï¿½ A better name for the NDAA would be the ï¿½Bill of Rights Cancellation Act.ï¿½ (32 minutes)

ï¿½ The phoniness of the American political system ï¿½ no more authentic than the Soviet one, really ï¿½ is proven by the recent statement by Republican party leaders in Iowa that they would ï¿½take careï¿½ of Ron Paul ï¿½ according to some observers, by faking the vote tally if necessary. (37 minutes)

ï¿½ A town in Spain has re-legalized the use of that countryï¿½s pre-Euro currency, the peseta ï¿½ to the great benefit of the areaï¿½s economy. What more proof is needed of the benefits of interest-free money ï¿½ of the ideas propounded in the book Social Credit? (40 minutes)

ï¿½ Insolvent industries get shut down. Insolvent businesses stop operating. Insolvent individuals go through bankruptcy and foreclosure. Why, then, do certain insolvent banks go on operating and get trillions upon trillions of dollars in free money? (50 minutes)

ï¿½ Inflation is a tax that punishes the the thrifty, that punishes the old, that punishes those on fixed incomes. It makes it almost pointless or impossible to save. And it is a tax that no one agreed to. It is a crime committed by banks and governments and it should be stopped ï¿½ and punished. (1 hour 1 minute)

ï¿½ Despite ï¿½ or perhaps because of ï¿½ the fact that labor unions are banned in Communist China and the fact that millions are virtually enslaved there, the Washington regime strongly favors their colleagues in Beijing, who own so much of ï¿½ourï¿½ debt. In case the figureheads who run the oligarchsï¿½ plantation in America get any ideas about being independent, the Chinese Communists have linked their currency in lockstep to the US dollar, so no adjustment of the exchange rate can ever be made. (1 hour 21 minutes)

ï¿½ So-called HD Radio is a farce which has caused the failure and bankruptcy of countless radio stations. But why was such an inferior digital system pushed on broadcasters and listeners? Who profits? (2 hours 11 minutes)

You can find ï¿½ and check in to ï¿½ the Liberty Net every Saturday night starting at 10PM Eastern Time (in recent weeks, the frequency has been well above 3950 SSB ï¿½ and has often been around 3980 plus or minus several kHz). You can also listen live on the Internet via http://3950.net/live ï¿½ or listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted here at http://3950.net every week.

Remember that the complete net recording is posted at the very top of the right column (under ï¿½Liberty Net Audioï¿½) here on http://3950.net ï¿½ usually on the Sunday immediately following the net, so look for it there if youï¿½d like to listen after the net has closed. These articles and summaries (found in the center column) show up a few days to a week later.

Once again, thanks to W1WCR and all participants for making this extraordinary net possible.

So now they're saying that even 10% power is impaired, huh? Gee. Why don't we just turn the entire FM band into a bunch of digital haystacks?

I still haven't heard how you plan to allocate 400 KHz worth of digital signal into a 200 KHz assigned FM channel. How does that work again?

I think you're well aware of the answer. Not every FM station will be able to use 400 Khz. Some can have only one sideband at maximum power. A small percentage can't use either sideband. Life is rough when you're trying to maximize spectral efficiency.

Actually, I'm not all that interested in bit rate. What methinks is a per channel, but with a sufficiently high uncorrectable error rate, the quality will suck. FEC helps, but isn't a cure all. Same problem ripping open the receiver and probing the guts. Getting the error rate is even more difficult.

I guess that includes me. You wouldn't believer the OTA FM noise I have to tolerate. Driving through the hills, the stations alternately appear and disappear. In between the radio just belches noise. Trying to hear anything over the road noise, scanner, and 2way radio noise is Perhaps the next step is to pass a law against driving while listening

With HD Radio if signal strength is too low (error rate too high) it simply won't lock on to HD.

In fact a very small percentage will be able to use 400 KHz at their assigned frequencies. We had this discussion once before, since the Ibiquity spec posted here:

http://www.nrscstandards.org/SG/NRSC-5-B/1026sE.pdf

shows double the occupied bandwidth for a digital signal.

You said that most stations are spaced far enough from their adjacent-channel neighbors that this wouldn't be a problem, despite numerous examples of adjacent-channel interference right here in the Bay Area. The fact is that this would work somewhat in the plains of Western Nebraska, but never in the Bay Area. Moving just one station has a severe domino effect. Let me give you an example of one such situation right here in the Bay Area:

The South Bay will soon have a full-power FM station on 93.7. Why?

93.7 KXZM in Felton will be increasing power. Why?

KXSM in Hollister is moving from 93.5 to 93.1 and increasing power. Why?

KOSO in Patterson moved from 93.1 to 92.9 and decreased power. Why?

So 93.1 KHLX in Pollock Pines could move their transmitter closer to Sacramento.

How did Pollock Pines get a radio station? Somebody bought a radio station in Susanville and moved it to Pollock Pines.

This is just one example of how tightly sandwiched signals are throughout the US. A transaction in Susanville has an effect on the Bay Area. Spacing is already so close that adjacent-channel HD interference is very obvious to those who know what it is. Those who don't know the difference between regular static and digital noise just turn off their radio. That is why those of us who care about the real future of broadcasting and know how to use a spectrum analyzer would like to see the Ibiquity scheme just go away and be replaced with a truly viable digital radio medium.

That's why the industry is pushing for asymmetric sidebands. 200 KHz is a compromise when 400 KHz isn't feasible.

It's absolutely vital to the future of terrestrial radio to move to digital broadcasting. It's the only way to remain a relevant choice.
We're not talking about radio enthusiasts, we're talking about the mass market which matters to broadcasters.

Oh BS. The average radio listener doesn't give a rats arse what medium its on so long as the content is good and it sounds reasonable. And for speech radio AM is perfectly satisfactory.

If music radio stations want to know why they're slowly haemoraging listeners perhaps they should listen to the computer generated playlist drivel they pump out occasionally.

Listeners are perfectly happy with the technical side of things. When FM radio started, stations knew... it is content that the people are going for.

So if stations worry about their future they should worry about content.

Content is one component. With HD Radio you can deliver more content.
It's a mistake to not look at the big picture though. Audio quality matters, and _every_ study has shown that digital radio's audio quality is perceived as much higher than analog radio. Cost matters too.

If content were all that mattered then everyone would be on satellite radio, which has relatively poor audio quality but an enormous selection of content at a relatively high price. Yet satellite radio can barely add enough new subscribers to make up for churn.

If cost didn't matter then everyone would have an unlimited data plan on a smart phone and would buy all all the music they wanted.

Coverage also matters. Streaming is fine if you have an unlimited data plan, but not on long trips outside wireless coverage areas.

Methinks content is everything with one big catch. Polluted content is a big problem. Having the correct content will attract listeners.
Interleaving the content with advertising, irritating announcers, and worthless PSA's, will drive them away. I've noticed that I tend to always change stations in the middle of commercials and announcements and rarely in the middle of a song or tune. I'm sure there's a study somewhere on WHEN listeners change stations, but I can't find it.

Another problem is convenience. I've only played with HD Radio in the stores and in a friends vehicle. I forgot the exact ordeal process required but one thing stood out. It was not possible to tune or scan across the band, catching all the regular FM and HD stations in sequence. You had to tune to the regular FM channel, and then switch to HD1 or HD2. As long as HD1 and HD2 are the poor step child of the regular FM station on the dial, people are not going to listen.

Incidentally, it was really irritating to listen to HD1 while moving.
Every time the error rate climbed to an unacceptable level, it would switch to the regular FM audio. No provisions for locking it on HD1 or switching to dead air. I forgot the maker and model, but I can ask the owner if necessary. I will admit that when the signal was strong enough, HD1 sounded quite good.

Convenience is also a problem with the lack of genre selection. On many computerized (PC based) radios, you don't just have a few presets. You have the stations programmed into memory by the type of music or talk they offer. I vaguely recall it can be rather fine grain to include genre changes by the hour. For example, I've been listening to KUFX lately. Repetitive "Classic rock" during the day, with sports in the evenings. Ideally, you should be able to punch a "60's rock" button and limit the selections to only those stations doing classical. The radio and the station support RBDS, the PTY (program type) data that allegedly accompanies the music or talk should contain the necessary genre info.
<http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Radio_Data_System>

As for streaming, that's what I'm doing after my Subaru stock CD player died (low output in the laser head) and my favorite classical FM station changed format. I preload about 8 hours of music, audio books, and TED talks onto a cheap MP3 player, which is hot-wired into the car radio. The only reason I bother to listen to FM is when I forget to preload the MP3 player or charge the player battery. I could also rip streaming content from the internet, but haven't bothered as it ties up my computers for too long a time.

HD Radio has been around long enough to make a determination if it's going to live or die. I suspect it will die because there's no compelling reason for Joe Sixpack to buy or install one. That's because the content of HD1 and HD2 often is quite similar to the regular FM channel. To the buyer, it's more of the same thing. Were HD1 and HD2 to offer commercial free or subscription based commercial free service, there might be an incentive, but those have been proscribed by economic necessity and FCC rules.

Installing an HD Radio is also not a trivial exercise. There are few plug in converters and those tend to be tied to specific high end radios. At this time, installing and HD Radio consists of ripping out the existing radio, and installing an upgraded radio. That's neither cheap nor easy. Lacking a compelling reason to do this, Joe Sixpack will probably install whatever the dealer has in stock. I checked Best Buy in Capitola. One radio on the shelf has HD and nobody in the store seemed to know anything about it. I asked a few questions and got some bad guesses. As long as that situation persists, the retrofit market is a lost cause.

Most markets are already fully loaded with stations. It's not more content, it is content people want that matters.

Non-stop music in any flavor might as well be played from a personal audio system, so I'm not surprised people won't pay a substantial monthly fee to get them.

The dial is fully loaded. That's doesn't mean the "menu" of choices is fully loaded.

How about the economic viability to get more stations in? Or does more stations mean less money per station and therefore less interesting content?

If what you say were true, HD radios would be flying off the shelves.

They're not.

If what you say were true, HD stations would not be turning off the digital transmitters.

They are.

Technology does NOT drive listening. Content and convenience of availability do.

IBOC is a technological travesty. It does not live up to its claims.

HD radio programming suffers from the same ills as the baseband.
Because it's being developed by the same people through the same research. Look at Chicago. The so called alternative offerings in HD are in fact, repackaged playlists of what's elsewhere on the dial. Check the actual songs. Same songs, different order.

HD radio programming has not lived up to its claims either.

If HD radio is to gain the traction it needs to drive listening, it has to 1) Be vastly better in audio quality. Perceptuals show marginal perceived improvements. And the numbers are not dramatic.

2) offer content that excites the listeners. So far, it doesn't.

3) offer that content in quickly, easily and reliably accessible form. It's not doing that, either.

HD radio is not living up to its hype. The claims made for it are not true.

IBOC, HD...it will eventually end up with some form of digital broadcasting.

Analog is not long for this world.

I don't know what "hype" you are referring to.

It's just some extra functionality added to the radio.

It's there....want to use it...go ahead.

No...just ignore it.

That may be true. But what we have, today, isn't the working solution. It's the equivalent of hanging chrome on an AVEO and calling it a Cadillac.

Conditional access, which is currently under test, won't be an improvement, either. And when pay radio hits the marketplace, the value of Sirius/XM will skyrocket with the public.

If you're going to have to pay for radio, why pay for just one market contour? For similar money, you can have radio in the whole country.

But this whole matter of broadcasting OTA may becoming moot, anyway. Digital alternatives, condition access or not, are becoming commonplace. More and more people are no longer using radios to access the content of their choice. iPods are becoming as upbiquitous in cars as vanity mirrors. PC listening is has replaced OTA radio in many of the homes in my neighborhood, and I've met a great number of teenagers (church group) who've never owned a radio. Most of them have never used one.

In my brother-in-law's household, there are no radios. None. They get they're music from Pandora, they listen to XM, or the iPod in the car, and couldn't tell you the last time they've listened to terrestrial radio.

One of my side businesses is building sound systems. Theatre systems. Public address. And lots of variations on music distribution in businesses and homes. In the last 5 years, I've not installed one broadcast tuner. Satellite radio receivers, yes. AM/FM, no. And when I ask my customers about HD, most have no idea what it is, the rest have no interest. Why? Because they get all the content they want off the net, off Satellite, or off...yes, it's true...they're cell phones. A number of years ago, I built a sound system for an airport. Distributed over a campus of a half dozen buildings at the ramp, and though all the hangars. I installed AM, FM and XM, with an airband radio in the administration building, and two of the FBO's. Unicom for ordering fuel, and the like. One one of my semi-annual routine maintenance calls, I noticed the AM/FM tuner was not only turned off, but disconnected, and sitting off in a corner. The administrator told me I could take it with me. They've never used it. All content piped throughout the campus was either XM, or it was a PC, plugged into the ports previously occupied by the tuner.

Of the home systems I've installed over the years, only 5 still use an FM Tuner. A fanfare, to be precise. The rest...entirely internet connected. They listen to their favorite stations over the internet. No radio reception involved. Or they listen to XM. Or Pandora. Only 5 still listen OTA. And they're beginning to complain about the increased noise floors and interferences from the sidebands of "IBOC" digital transmissions.

HD radio, may be a technological solution in search of a problem. It doesn't offer the improvement in audio promised. And programming alternatives are merely repackages of the same content on other stations. WLS-FM, for instance, broadcast it's baseband on HD-1, and its AM on HD-2. With wildly apathetic results.

In the meantime, HD radio, IBOC is not the solution.

And the public has shown its disinterest in creating a market for a product that does not live up to the claims made for it.

If you are saying we need more development and improvment for digital radio to be a primary platform...I would agree. Let's hope it only gets better.

Right now...this is what we got.

> HD radio, may be a technological solution in search of a problem.

Gee, was this is a "sound bite" that is oft repeated from HD WHiners.

The problem is...not enough choices on the (free) broadcast band to keep up with what the populace is expecting these days.

HD IBOC is one solution.

> It doesn't offer the improvement in audio promised.

It does. However, people are not buying it for "audio improvment".

This is not true. There has been great efforts not to simply duplicate programming available on analog.

Ity's not THE solution...it's A solution.

Don't like it...don't use it.

Just another choice.

Actually, it doesn't. Perceptuals are not reality. A number of studies which have been conducted have specifically excluded trained ears, musicians, and audiophiles, in favor of largely uninvolved, uninterested, and unhearing individuals, who detect a contrast between two sources and declare improvement, by the way the question is worded. Easy to do with passersby who have no interest in the product, or who have neither experience nor expectation.

9 out of 10 doctors also recommended cigarette smoking to aid and improve digestion.

The only meaningful studies that will determine HD Radio's technological solutions to improving audio quality will be studies that measure noise, distortion, and precision of reproduction, comparing one technology to another, against a control--source material.

Here, HD falls quite flat.

> However, people are not buying it for "audio improvment".

"People" aren't buy it at all. Comparatively speaking. If HD Radio offered the vastly sought after programming you claim, and the audio quality is so superior, radios would be flying off the shelves. They're not.

Hard reality. Sales tells the story that marketing wants not to have told. And sales demonstrate that the pubic isn't buying what iBiquity is selling.

> The public has shown disinterest in ALL radio.....hard to get anyone > interested in antyhing to do with radio these days.

Hence my comment: HD is a technological solution in search of a problem. The public has shown little interest in the solutions IBOC presents, just as they're showing little interest in broadcasting as a whole. As I explained in the previous post.

As I have FM on in my office, all day. My objection is that IBOC not only doesn't produce the audio quality I'm getting now, but it's also responsible for increased noise and distortion on my FM's, reducing my available audio quality as a whole.

All based on the perceptuals of those who could care less about audio quality.

Thanks, for nothing.

I have not seen a study where people can tell a difference in any of the attributes mentioned above.

Well...people aren't buying RADIOS at all....so it's a non-starter.

I didn't say "vastly sought after"...I would use the term alternative programming. It's more niche.

I already addressed the fact that people are not moved by the argument of quality.

Again, the whole story is that there is apathy about ALL radio, Ham, SWL, Scanners, XM, HD, AM....

Does sales tell a story about that too?

No, it doesn't. There is no "sales finish line"...

As has been said before...content and programming is what people go to radio for.

There has been no effort made by iBiquity or stations themselves to sell HD based on the additional formats streams available.

- With HD Radio if signal strength is too low (error rate too high) it
- simply won't lock on to HD.

That is how the IBOC "HD" Radio Systems is supposed to work Digial when possible and the default is Analog.
In-Band On-Channel (IBOC)
http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/IBOC

When you can not get KCBS-AM 740 kHz http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/KCBS_%28AM%29
You either get the 'HD' Digital Signal or the Analog Signal and if you are just getting the Analog Signal then the Digital {Hash} Side-Bands don't matter cause you are "On-Channel" between them.

Like it or not; for the Radio Listener who is listening to his/her Favorite 'Local' Radio Station the IBOC Side Bands are a non-issue : That's a problem for someone else who is listing to some other Radio Station.

Think about it; did you care about what was happening on all the other Radio Stations across the band; while you were listening to your Favorite 'Local' Radio Station 10~20~30 Years Ago . . . NAH !

Mostly people listen to what they 'can' hear as mindless background noise while they go about their daily lives at home, work or driving.

The beauty of Radio is that it is often a secondary {background} activity while you are focused on something else : While TV Watching {Viewing} requires your full {fool} involvement as a primary activity; and that usually means that you have to sit down and 'Watch' IT[TV].

- Spacing is already so close that adjacent-channel
- HD interference is very obvious to those who know
- what it is.

NAH - To the average Radio Listener the simply will continue to listen to their Favorite 'Local' Radio Station.
To the 99% : Radio Listening It's About Your 'Station*' not the entire Radio Band.

* Maybe 1~2~3 Favorite 'Local' Radio Stations.

- Those who don't know the difference between regular
- static and digital noise just turn off their radio.

NAH - They will continue to listen to their Favorite 'Local' Radio Station. -again- To the 99% : Radio Listening It's About Your 'Station*' not the entire Radio Band.

- That is why those of us who care about the real
- future of broadcasting and know how to use a
- spectrum analyzer would like to see the Ibiquity
- scheme just go away and be replaced with a truly
- viable digital radio medium.
- Dave B.

"spectrum analyzer" ROTFL clearly you are one of the 1%ers; and thus are NOT worthy of consideration

Most Cable TV and Dish SAT-TV services offer 30~60 Channels of good quality "Non-stop music in any flavor" along with all those TV Channels.

At Home turning on 'My' All Music All The Time is done by turning on the Set Top Box and the Audio System plugged into the back of it {the TV stays 'Off'}. Also have an FM Transmitter in-line for 'My'
All Music All The Time on any FM Radio in and around the House. -use-what-you-already-have-

- If HD radio is to gain the traction it needs to drive
- listening, it has to
- 1) Be vastly better in audio quality.
- Perceptuals show marginal perceived improvements.
- And the numbers are not dramatic.

This is key the 'Perceptuals' did not show that it got worse.

- Well...people aren't buying RADIOS at all....so it's a non-starter.

Actually People and incidentally buy Radios with each
New and Used Car/Truck Purchase.

The biggest transitional-migratory path for Audio Content Consumers to HD-Radio is via Automobile

Purchases; and experiencing HD-Radio in their Autos. So figure that for some their 'new' Auto Radio experience is a 3~5 Year cycle and for many their 'new' Auto Radio experience is around a decade
~10 Years. Therefore the HD-Radio "Evolution" {transitional-migratory period} can be seen as a one to two decade process.

Note that WDMK-FM 105,9 MHz is claim to be the 'First' FCC Authorized IBOC HD-Radio Broadcaster around 11 NOV 2002 [2003].

So consider that HD-Radio's 1st Decade will end around 2013; and the 2nd Decade ends around 2023.

Also some {not all} Media Players include an FM Radio*
as a secondary feature.

* Note : But not an AM Radio

Yes, I have. Digital artifacts. High noise. More distortion than wideband AM.

I did a proof of performance on one AM HD system. It failed to meet the audio performance requirements of NRSCII.

HD FM was better than HD AM, but failed to meet the noise and distortion specs of FM

So, NO...HD radio doesn't offer the improvement in audio that's been promised.

Then read any article by Ken Pohlmann during the early days of CD.
He published dozens of them. If audible differences between the extant technologies and CD were detectable, the audible differences between HD Radio and FM are detectable.

Read the Fraunhofer studies about the audible differences between MP3 and CD audio.

There's plenty of scientific data available for those who wish to know the facts.

Quoting marketing perceptuals to rebut scientifically observed facts is a logic failure common to iBiquity fanbois.

> programming. It's more niche.

Look at actual playlists. It's hardly niche. It's repackaged programming that's found elsewhere on the dial. Read the actual playlists. On 8 of the HD subchannels in Chicago, this so-called alternative programming, played the exact same tunes as baseband FM stations elsewhere on the dial. Only the order was different. And the patter. But even the patter didn't differ by much.

And why is this? Because the content is being developed by the same people who are programming the baseband. The same mentality, the same research, the same business model with the same goals. Why would doing things the same way by the same people produce anything that was actually different?

It wouldn't.

It doesn't.

And where there is genuinely unique and alternative programming, it's audience is vanishingly small.

Even in a market the size of Chicago, there's no viable market for genuinely alternative programming. The lifegroup size is simply too small to attract advertisers.

And in the US, broadcasting has always been about the money. Even HD subchannels are about the money.

Satellite Radio, with its much broader reach has the potential to monetize small lifegroup size by aggregating the niche across the entire landscape of the population into salable numbers...but even Satellite Radio has failed to do that. Why?...probably because the same people who programmed the radio stations that satellite users subscribed to escape from, were programming satellite radio.

Same shit, different fee structure. Subscriptions are not increasing as expected.

And where there was real alternative programming on Satellite radio, there wasn't enough of a market to support the cost of providing it. So, those channels were removed to give way to the simulcast commercial stations...with their own commercial load.

So, if you're taking the position that HD radio offers alternative programming on the digital subchannels, you're again dispensing misleading information. Urban, with a playlist expanded by one tier and different disc jockeys isn't alternative programming, when you've got 4 or five other urban stations playing the same tunes. Simulcasting your AM on an HD FM subchannel isn't alternative programming when the AM is still on the air.

And the great Oldies 104 experiment in Chicago, when WJMK, Chicago, went to Jack-FM and put the WJMK format on the HD subchannel, because of the huge public outcry when Oldies 104 was removed from the dial, produced insufficient revenue to support itself, and it's disc jockeys' salaries, because no one was going out to buy an HD radio to hear Dick Biondi and Fred Winston play the same music that could be heard could be heard on the 'new' WLS-FM Oldies format.

Now, there's nothing to say that what you claim CAN'T happen with HD Radio...it can. Provided someone is willing to make the commitment to offer genuinely alternative programming, and stick with it, come what may. But this is Radio. Research, corporate and local business goals, and a headspace dominated by P&L statements, are going to erase the intents of creatives, in order to monetize the product to meet revenue goals.

That means more of the same.

Hell, at CBS, Hollander even went so far as to take the Free-For-All alternative concept of Jack-FM, and put it on a computerized playlist.
Why? Because he needed it to fit into the corporate business model.

HD radio is no different than what's currently being offered, because it's RADIO. Alternative in name, but not in content. Lower audio quality claiming to be CD quality...all in the name of, God love 'em, profits. A lot of marketing. A lot of license fees for iBiquity. Not a lot of substance to the claims.

It's still a business, after all. And if alternative programming could produce the revenue, it wouldn't be alternative.

Historically, trying to constrain the supply to increase revenue has failed when there are alternative products available. We're not talking about crude oil here, we're talking about methods to deliver content.

If listeners don't find the content they want on terrestrial radio then they switch to other sources, which of course is what has been happening, with internet streaming, satellite radio (to a lesser extent), or simply playing locally stored content).

Remember that for vehicles, until the 1980's tape decks and CD players were not standard equipment, people listened to the radio in their car, or they installed an after-market head unit, or if they had a lot of money they got the dealer-installed or factory installed optional tape deck.

The solution for terrestrial radio stations is to compete on content, both quality and quantity, and many are doing exactly that. The FM stations that threaten to hold their breath until they turn blue because they believe that there are better digital radio alternatives to IBOC will fail.

You're right, and ironically, at least for now, the HD sub-channels do a wonderful job of solving that problem. There are sufficiently few HD receivers that the stations can't or don't sell advertising on the sub-channels.

I can't speak for all receivers, but the ones I have don't work that way. When you scan, it scans in sequence by frequency and then by sub-channel. And of course you can preset and HD2 channel which is what I do, and what I suspect most people do on car radios, whether it's an analog or a digital channel.

You're also right about reception. At 1% power, reception is poor outside urban areas. That will be solved with power increases. Many head units do allow you to go to analog only mode.

> Installing an HD Radio is also not a trivial exercise.

On older vehicles, which have a standard single DIN or double DIN opening, it's quite easy to change the head unit. You buy the harness that matches your vehicle and attach it to the wires from the head unit, and it all plugs right in. In most vehicles it's very straightforward. On newer vehicles where the audio system is non-standard, you're right, adding HD is more of a pain. You can usually find an adapter that plugs in to a port on the back of the unit intended for a satellite tuner.

But the bottom line is that most people are not going to change their vehicle's head unit unless it fails. The big increase in digital receivers is coming from new cars where they are standard or optional equipment from the factory.

A New America www.NewAmericaMovie.com is a documentary film that outlines the history of the Progressive movement in America over the last century. It analyzes how Progressive ideology has transformed public policy, the structures of government, and its potential impact on the country’s future. An example of historical analysis contained in the film would be the argument that the Progressive ideals employed by FDR’s New Deal were the cause of the Great Depression, not the solution to it.

Through interviews with Constitutional scholars, authors, historians, public policymakers, and others, it reviews the original intent of the Founders, why it is important and lays out how Progressivism is in conflict with that original intent.

As socialistworker.org admits, http://socialistworker.org/2003-2/471/471_09_Fascism.shtml
the left routinely applies the term "fascist" to any Republican political leader. In Britain The Guardian, BBC, and other liberal media pounced on purported links between the Bush family and corporations that had dealings with Nazi Germany. The fact that Prescott Bush, George W. Bush's grandfather, was a "director and shareholder" with companies that had indirect financial dealings with Germany in the 1930s would hardly seem damning, however. Much the same could be said for many other affluent individuals in America or Britain at the time. Every American today with mutual fund holdings is invested, at least indirectly, in Hugo Chavez's Venezuela. Does that make them Marxist revolutionaries?

Talk of Hitler became a lot more common during the Bush years, when it was accepted wisdom on the left that George Bush was worse than Hitler. Then there was Nancy Pelosi, who spent weeks back in 2010 complaining of the Tea Party's so-called "swastika signs" -- signs that did not signal an alliance with fascism but opposition to it. Pelosi was hardly alone in accusing the Tea Party of fascism. Marc Rubin, writing for examiner.com, referred to Tea Party members as "text book fascists." He went on to pin the neo-fascist label on Tom Tancredo, presumably because of Tancredo's concerns over illegal immigration. If those concerns make Tancredo a fascist, they would make the majority of Americans who share those concerns fascists as well. But that's pretty much how the left sees America.

The immediate response of liberals such as Chris Matthews http://www.mrc.org/biasalert/2011/20110412110017.aspx to the Ryan "Path to Prosperity" was to characterize it as a killer not just of babies and old people but of "half the people who watch this show." This attempt to portray the GOP plan as genocidal is just another example of the fascist rhetoric. It appears that Matthews is attempting to portray the Ryan plan as some sort of Final Solution.

It's not just loose cannons on MSNBC who resort to fascist innuendo. Obama's speechwriters are good at crafting sinister suggestions even without using the "F" word. Obama's budget speech of April 13 actually set the tone for the current debate. With Rep. Ryan sitting on the front row, Obama lectured his audience that the GOP plan would kick "someone's grandparents" out of nursing homes and cause children with autism and Down's syndrome to "fend for themselves." It is well known that Hitler sent legions of the disabled to concentration camps to be gassed, but the suggestion that a plan to actually save Medicare and Medicaid resembles the Holocaust, if that is what Obama intended, is repellent. It was one more proof, as if we needed any more, of a fatal weakness in the character of this President. He is a man whose entire existence is devoted to gutter politics. For such a man, statesmanship and dignified leadership are inconceivable.

The plain truth is that America can no longer afford this sort of reckless partisanship on the part of the chief executive. The fact that Obama disagrees with Rep. Ryan's budget plan does not justify accusations of killing sick children or tossing old folks out on the street. That kind of rhetoric may pass for wit in the sixth grade, but it is juvenile coming from the President.

"It is obvious what the fraudulent issue of fascism versus communism accomplishes: it sets up, as opposites, two variants of the same political system; it eliminates the possibility of considering capitalism; it switches the choice of “Freedom or dictatorship?” into “Which kind of dictatorship?”—thus establishing dictatorship as an inevitable fact and offering only a choice of rulers. The choice—according to the proponents of that fraud—is: a dictatorship of the rich (fascism) or a dictatorship of the poor (communism)."

"That fraud collapsed in the 1940’s, in the aftermath of World War II. It is too obvious, too easily demonstrable that fascism and communism are not two opposites, but two rival gangs fighting over the same territory—that both are variants of statism, based on the collectivist principle that man is the rightless slave of the state—that both are socialistic, in theory, in practice, and in the explicit statements of their leaders—that under both systems, the poor are enslaved and the rich are expropriated in favor of a ruling clique—that fascism is not the product of the political “right,” but of the “left”—that the basic issue is not “rich versus poor,” but man versus the state, or: individual rights versus totalitarian government—which means: capitalism versus socialism."

that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - http://mises.org/midroad.asp

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

The origins of the modern left can be traced back to the famous passage in Rousseau's Discourse on the Origin and Foundations of Inequality, in which he condemned the institution of private property:

"The first man, who after enclosing a piece of ground, took it into his head to say, 'this is mine,' and found people simple enough to believe him, was the real founder of civil society."

Added Rousseau: "How many crimes, how many wars, how many murders, how many misfortunes and horrors, would that man have saved the human species, who pulling up the stakes or filling up the ditches should have cried to his fellows: Beware of listening to this impostor; you are lost, if you forget that the fruits of the earth belong equally to us all, and the earth itself to nobody!"

Around the 1830s, a faction of French liberals gravitated toward Romanticism and the philosophy of the late Rousseau, proclaiming that capitalism, private property, and the increasing complexity of modern society were agents of moral decay -- both for the individual and for society at large. This is essentially the worldview that has made its way, through history, into the collective mind of the modern left; it is a worldview calling for a revolution that not only will topple the existing capitalist order and punish its corrupt leaders, but that also will replace that order with a socialist regime where the utopian ideals of perfect justice and equality will reign. Such an ambition can be put into effect only by a totalitarian state with the authority to micromanage every facet of human life, precisely the end-point toward which the policies and crusades of the modern left are directed.

When the term "liberalism" (from the Latin word liberalis, meaning "pertaining to a free man") first emerged in the early 1800s, its hallmarks were a belief in individual rights, the rule of law, limited government, private property, and laissez faire economics. These would remain the defining characteristics of liberalism throughout the liberal epoch (generally identified as the period of 1815-1914). Yet the modern left, which portrays itself as the agent of enlightened commitment to "liberal" causes, in fact stands for the antithesis of each of the foregoing liberal ideals. Contrary to its self-definition, the left is neither "liberal" nor "progressive," but rather a reactionary force that seeks to resurrect the traditions that characterized the epoch which preceded the rise of classical liberalism.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

When you hear the Liberal Fascist JackAss propaganda that THEY are the true patriots then you know the time is near. Look for it from the socialist Labor Unions such as the SEIU!
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

Yes, I can. But the point that you removed from the quote was that it was a survey. Of doctors. No different than the surveys used to support the conclusions regarding HD radio. Same methodology.
Same intent.

And, as you conveniently ignored, the results, and the sources of the survey material were to be found in the pages of Look. Or Life.

Your selective rebuttal is getting obvious, there, my friend.

What people embrace and accept has nothing to do with audio quality. That's why mp3 is not widely accepted in audiophilia. Nor is it acceptable as source material in studios anymore.

My audio clients won't even accept an mp3 for audition, anymore.

MP3 may be on iPods from sea to shining sea, but its limits have clearly defined where and under what circumstances mp3 is applicable. Which returns to the point that it's the content that drives listening. "People" put mp3's on their iPods so they can cram more content onto a single drive.

Audiophiles using iPod, use .aif or .wav, or a lossless codec rather than mp3, because the audio quality is not acceptable.

That data and facts can be manipulated is evidenced by the very

It's actually more fundamental than that. Satellite Radio hasn't embraced many niche formats because there isn't ENOUGH money to be made, compared to more 'mainstream' programming. It's about the money. And the same people who fucked up Radio, are programming Sirius/XM.

Why? Because they see more money in that.

I'm not sure why there is even a discussion about either quality or selection, since the great masses of youth (the ones being marketed TO) are sheep. They listen to what they are TOLD to by the PM's at the radio stations, who, in turn, play what THEY are told to by the recording industry. The few that actually WANT alternative programming do not constitute (and never will) a sales pool that will be profitable.

With all the stupid new laws going (or that have gone) into effect regarding pay for content, many stations' profit margin has dropped significantly. The recording industry has bitten the hand that feeds it by requiring stations (ESPECIALLY HD2 and HD3 streams as well as internet streams) to pay exhorbatant fees for content.

People working in digital radio always come up with the stale argument that people who don't like it "do not know what they are talking about".
They have done so in Europe as well.

There will come a point, and it will be well too late, that the recording industry recognizes this.

But the damage they do in the meantime will be significant.

It's TV channel 6 in the US. This has been discussed to death, but there are still many stations on channel 6, even after the shift to digital. Some are also saying "use the low VHF TV band to expand cell phones, etc." but that would be very problematic due to the physics of antenna construction. I doubt that people want to go back to having whip antennas on their portable phones. Personally, I think if they dropped the entire 54-88 MHz low VHF TV band, they should give a section of it, maybe 2-4 MHz, over to a license-free public "Free band" where amateur broadcasters (i.e. "pirates") could legally broadcast. Sort of like what they did to the 11m Citizens Band.

This is a good point.

And I would also add that this claim about he-aac is used by Encoder Technologies, who developed the codec (or at least the SBR part), and so have a vested interest in making it sound as good as possible.

In reality aac+ can sound good at 48k, but not CD quality, as Encoder Technologies would like you to believe. Also I suspect that many broadcasters don't use it under ideal conditions. Previously when many internet broadcasters used 64k aac+, it was not excellent. It did sound acceptable, but not excellent, as there were some SBR artifacts.

Add to this the fact that most HD-Radio broadcasters, don't actually use any bit rates higher than 40k. At 40k even aac+ sounds poor, and presumably the HD-Radio codec will sound even worse.

If HD-Radio used the maximum bit rate of 96k, then it would probably sound acceptable under every day listening conditions. But even at 96k it would be lower quality than a good FM signal, and would rule out any hi-fi listening via terrestrial radio. That is something that I just don't feel right about.

And that is the sad reality of the situation.

And if the FM band is ever cleared of analog stations, by the time that that happens, iBiquity HD radio will be a dinosaur in the broadcasting world, like eight tracks cassettes are in the CD world.

The question listeners and radio stations should be asking is, what digital system could be developed for future use, rather than continuing with the present failures of DAB and HD(tm) radio.

It's amusing to see proclamations that since the digital radio system in the U.S. is not of a quality that audiophiles would accept that somehow it needs to be scrapped in favor of something with a much higher bit rate so those listening to concerts in their car can do so from the radio rather than from a CD. The reason that every double blind test of audio quality has shown that listeners prefer digital radio over analog has much more to do with interference resulting from impaired conditions than from the raw bit rate. Every compression scheme is a compromise, and the key is to find a scheme that is of acceptable quality, not one that is lossless and that is as good as the original uncompressed content (though of course CDs are also compressed content).

The question that digital radio answered was "what is a spectrally efficient method of using existing bandwidth to increase content choices and audio quality _and_ that has a clear path to an all digital system. If there had been any competition, it would have been another IBOC system.

Broadcasters should be thrilled about the costs being incurred by streaming companies like Pandora, as well as the costs incurred by satellite radio, since terrestrial broadcasters are not paying content royalty fees like streamers and satellite radio are. Unless of course the station also streams, but they only pay the content royalties based on the number of on-line listeners.

The Performance Rights Act (never passed) would have imposed content royalty fees on radio stations but they are much lower fees than are currently paid by satellite or streaming. There will probably be future attempts to pass this sort of legislation. One problem is that there is no way of knowing how many listeners are listening to a specific station in order to charge royalties per listener. With Arbitron ratings so inaccurate, broadcasters would not agree to paying royalties based on those ratings, so royalties per song would be based on some other metric, such as total station revenue (in order to avoid destroying small stations).

It is true that HD Radio sub-channels are charged royalty fees to artists (through SESAC, ASCAP, and BMI) because they are essentially separate station. I don't know how the issue of HD1 versus analog is handled. Since it's the same content on both, do the stations have to pay only once? But HD sub-channels aren't charged content royalty fees (unless of course they are also streaming, and then it's just for the number of people streaming).

If you care about the financial health of a radio station, and have a choice between streaming an OTA listening, choose OTA.

Agreed.

We did have high hopes for DRM+, and what they developed was a pretty good narrow band broadcasting standard, although not as good as it could have been, mostly due to not using the best error correction. Also I think they should have extended it's frequency range up to Band III. That would allow one DAB channel to be used for many small local radio stations.

For wider band multiplexes, we appear to have got exactly what we needed with DVB-T2-Lite. The problem now is whether it ever actually gets used for radio.

I'm also thinking, perhaps they ought to come out with a version of DVB to rival DRM+. Basically a narrow band version of DVB-T2-Lite. Perhaps they could call it DVB-TN or something like that. Basically use any relevant techniques used for T2-Lite but designed for much narrower channels. Perhaps a choice of 100Khz or 200Khz bandwidth. (The reason why I included 200Khz is for situations where a broadcaster can not use Qam64, in which case a wider bandwidth would be required to achieve a good bit rate).

I would also suggest that a narrow band standard should also be designed to be able work well in SFN mode. The problem here would be signals from different TX sites being out of phase and so cancelling each other out. I think this problem could be solved by allowing the phase of the transmission to be changed randomly at regular intervals. Different TX sites could then change their phase in different ways, so if the signal cancels at one moment in time, the phases would soon change, and then it would no longer cancel.

If they did look at the big picture, and considered everything, then they would have realized that broadcasting DRM+ in between the FM stations would be a better solution than using HD-Radio.

Thankfully that is not the reality at all.

If you look at table 5.2.1 at <http://www.nrscstandards.org/DRB/Non-NRSC%20reports/NPRmultiple_bit_rate_report.pdf>
you can actually learn where listeners begin to not like the audio quality.

Only clueless listeners and radio stations would be asking that question. Those living in the real world know that the digital system in use in the U.S. is going to be around for a long time. And as HD continues to be deployed in other countries, there will be pressure for the ROW to go along with it as well. That's the actual reality of the situation.

To me that table seems to suggest that more than 1/2 the listeners could tell the difference between a slightly lower it rate, and a slightly higher bit rate.

Where is there a table showing how many people thought lower bit rates sounded OK, or were comparable to CD quality, or even comparable to FM quality.

Of did they conveniently not include things like this, as it did not show what they wanted.

It may well be around for a long time, but whether people actually want to listen to it is another matter.

Here in the UK we've had DAB for about 15 years now, but still only a minority of people actually listen to it.

I think perhaps you accidentally added an "s" to the end of the word country ;-)

But seriously. What other countries are actually seriously deploying HD-Radio. I suspect the answer will be very few, if any.

And what is so wrong with the idea of developing good modern digital broadcast systems, instead of using old out dated system like DAB and HD-Radio.

When I bought my new computer, I didn't buy a Sinclair ZX spectrum. I bought a modern Laptop.

Why don't you just record a sample of HD radio audio, encode it into FLAC format, and the upload it for us, so that we can judge the audio quality with our own ears.
Or are you worried that we will find out just how bad it sounds.

citizens enjoy a very high standard of living by international standards. You see, in Socialist Korea the state guarantees all citizens the right to quality healthcare, education, stipends for the disabled, retirement pensions and access to recreational facilities, as well as a wide array of other state-supported services.

Indeed, DPRK citizens are guaranteed many provisions that are uncommon in many developed capitalist societies which are home to real poverty. Unlike many countries of the capitalist world, the DPRK is a state free of homelessness, unemployment, prostitution crime, rampant drug use, alcoholism and the pandemic of mental illness that plagues the Western world.

Looking forward to another inspiring Voice of Korea broadcast from Pyongyang on 11735 this evening. Yes life is good.

Who is talking about the UK -not-me-
The UK has 62M Radio Listeners -versus- 307M
American Radio Listeners [5X the market]

For the USA 76-88 MHz added to the current FM Radio Band would add another 60 Channels which would be required to be IBOC "HD" Radio and have HD-2 sub-channels.

Presently there are around ~10,200 FM Radio Stations across the USA which is about 100 per FM Channel spread across the Nation.
http://transition.fcc.gov/Daily_Releases/Daily_Business/2012/db0106/DOC-311837A1.pdf

So with 60 more FM Channels there could be ~6000 more FM Radio Stations in the USA :
Which means that all the present AM Radio Stations could be moved to the Expanded FM Radio Band 76-88 MHz.
-say-bye-bye-to-the- AM Radio Band
-hello- Expanded "HD" Radio FM Band +plus+ Added in the HD-2 sub-channels even at 25% of the total that's ~4000 new HD-2
Radio Stations On-the-Air.

That in itself would generate Radio Listener interest in Digital "HD" Radio and sell new

- Only clueless listeners and radio stations
- would be asking that question. Those living
- in the real world know that the digital system
- in use in the U.S. is going to be around for
- a long time. And as HD continues to be deployed
- in other countries, there will be pressure for
- the ROW to go along with it as well.
- That's the actual reality of the situation.

It's not sad at all. IBOC was chosen in the U.S. for some very good reasons:

1. Expands content choices with no additional bandwidth
2. Improves audio quality (or at least perceived audio quality) to radio listeners
3. Provides a clear path to all-digital while protecting existing broadcasters.

Do you think that both broadcasters and the FCC was not aware of the drawbacks of the IBOC approach during the transition to all digital FM?

In fact they clearly stated what the drawbacks were and decided that the benefits were worth it.

Personally I think they might have just left AM alone and let AM continue its slow decline rather than make another attempt to improve it. We saw where "AM Stereo" went. However, to be fair, AM-HD is simply piggybacking onto the success and desirability FM-HD, something that AM Stereo did not have the advantage of doing.

That's ignoring a lot. Yes, of course the present licensees did not want to create a lot more supply that they would have felt compelled to bid for or face new competition but that was not the only reason for the IBOC solution.

Some of the other reasons IBOC was chosen over other digital options:

1. No available spectrum for a new band. Reallocating spectrum is very difficult. A digital upgrade without changing frequencies was highly desirable.

2. No transition plan of existing spectrum from analog to digital with some other options.

3. Less consumer confusion when the frequencies don't change.

4. At the time is was selected, the only competition was DAB which was very inefficient. DAB+ offers audio quality almost as good as HD, but a) it wasn't available when HD was selected, and b) it wasn't IBOC.

While most people would not weep if Clear Channel or Cumulus faced new competition from another radio band, a lot of radio stations are still independently owned and the value of their licenses would be significantly reduced by the creation of more stations.

Except for those of us spectrum managers who are sensitive to those things, there is no consumer confusion when "WXXX" went from Channel 12 to Channel 44-DT but still IDs as "WXXX12".

Nope. Testing by the European Broadcasting Union showed similar results in perceived audio quality with the HE-AAC Codec (which is not surprising since the iBiquity Codec is a slightly modified HE-AAC Codec).

"at an audio bit rate of 48 kbps, HE-AAC offers good to excellent quality at an audio bit rate of 64 kbps it offers excellent quality."

Yes the Scandinavian countries lead the world in all key components that measure the standard of living - very admirable. Unfortunately you, as an American, will never reap the benefits of a just society based upon socialism because you live in a plutocracy sustained by predatory capitalism.

I would suggest you join the Democratic Socialists of America http://www.dsausa.org/dsa.html if you aspire to change the absurd system under which you are enslaved. The top 5% Americans have more wealth than the remaining 95% of the population, I mean really, how obscene is that?

The DPRK does not allow immigration. Unlike the corrupt U.S. government (corporate sock puppets) the leaders of the DPRK actually protect the well being of their citizenry by not allowing hordes of scab labor to invade their country.

Insult aside, it was a survey designed by the Tobacco Industry.
It was a survey designed by the business its conclusion supported.
The results were used to promote sales the industry's products.

Not unlike iBiquity designing and sponsoring surveys the results of which supports sales of its products.

Again, I'd hope you could see the similarities.

And DAB+ can deliver 128 kbps while HD radio can't. 128 kbps sounds quite a lot better than 96 kbps.
Digital radio people try to fool us into believing that 48 kbps sounds decent. It doesn't.

The surveys I have seen were not designed nor sponsored by iBiquity...but were seperate research projects done by stations themselves by hiring outside research companies with no stake in the outcome.

If you look at section 2.2 of that paper you'll find that Ibiquity controlled the audio samples used in that test. The "digital" signal fed to the participants was the output of a CD player with the level carefully controlled and run through the Ibiquity codec with no other audio processing whatsoever. The "analog" signal was run through an Omnia 6EX and an Optimod 8400 where it was compressed (in the analog domain, I'm speaking of now).

Is it any wonder that people felt the HD signal had superior audio quality? Things don't sound so good when you squash the dynamic range. So this is just a classic case of the fox guarding the henhouse, isn't it.

My very favorite complaint about broadcast radio. There is no LEGITIMATE reason to process broadcast audio. Yes, I know they try to tell us that that they need to sculpt it for listening in a car. And of course, the stations do it to try to compete for the attention of listeners by "who's the loudest?" All it really does, though, is distort the program material, and ruin the listening experience by cutting the dynamic range so far that in many cases the difference between highest and lowest levels in a given track is 6 dB or less. This not an exaggeration.

I think 6 db is being generous in some cases :-)

But I have to take issue with that statement at least partially. Some light processing with really slow AGC can cover a multitude of sins when program material varies in level and the operator is not diligent about watching the board. In addition, a bit of processing is pretty much necessary to prevent overmodulation on some material, thanks to the FM pre-emphasis curve.

My favorite setup is the Aphex compeller set really slow with about 6 db of gain reduction when the board is set to proper levels. Follow that with an Optimod set to ride the gain peaks at about 3 db, with maybe 9 db reduction on the high end when there's a big cymbal crash or similar.

You mention "surveys" in the plural. The only one I have seen is this:

http://www.nrscstandards.org/Reports%20ref%20docs/iBiquity%20Gen%203%20report/FM%20IBOC%20subj%20eval.pdf

where Ibiquity purposely controlled the audio chain to make the analog sample sound bad. What others are there?

There have been many across the country. I've been involved in 8,
I think. Maybe one more.

In two, the process for selection of participants specifically ruled out those who had audio experience...musicians, producers, engineers...and audiophiles. This was accomplished several ways.

In 3 or 4 others, the results were selectively compiled to produce a desired result.

In one, a public demonstration at a remote, the results were tainted by a poor location to receive the FM analog signal.

In all of them, the analog source was specifically chosen for its inferiour sound.

And all were conducted according to guidelines specificed in documents from iBiquity. And all, had a stake in the outcome.
"Promotional consideration" doesn't even begin to cover it.

All but one were conducted by 'independent companies' that do focus groups, perceptuals, and other surveys for the broadcast and advertising industries. The exception, was conducted by a radio station, itself, at one of its public appearances.

And has been asserted here, the results were, indeed, overwhelmingly in favor of HD radio. But, again, none were scientific. Most were highly selective. None were double, or often single blind. They were, in fact, surveys conducted to promoted a product.

I got involved in the process as a part-time employee of an entity contracted to conduct the tests. How I got to be a part time employee...well that's a circuitous tale that began by me calling a colleague at a radio station promoting HD and asking how I could participate in a survey. He told me I couldn't. Period. But, in the conversation he did drop a couple of names of persons, that I then contacted looking for employment, on a part time basis, which got me in to participate in the studies. And several non HD broadcast related studies, as well. Watching focus groups discuss language while high on pizza and Code Red was better than "30 Rock." Of course, nothing was as eye opening as helping conduct focus group research at CBS.

What's also not being addressed, is that stations are also processing the dynamics on the HD streams. Like record companies do with CD audio.
Like ITunes does with MP3's. The way nearly all web audio, and satellite radio audio is processed.

The comparison between processed and unprocessed audio in these demonstrations implies that what will be heard on the air is, in fact, unprocessed audio.

This is not the case.

So, virtually from the moment of implementation, HD radio fails to live up to the promise.

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
09 - 15 January 2012

Solar activity was at low to moderate levels. Activity was low during 09 - 13 January. Moderate levels were reached on 14 January due to an M1 flare at 14/1318 UTC from new Region 1401 (N17, L = 218, class/area Dai/200 on 15 January). Activity returned to low levels on 15 January. There were no Earth-directed CMEs during the period.

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at normal to moderate levels during 09 - 12 January. Predominately normal levels were observed during 13 - 15 January.

Geomagnetic field activity was at mostly quiet levels during 09 - 12
January. Activity increased to quiet to unsettled levels on 13 January due to a coronal hole high-speed stream (CH HSS). Field activity decreased to quiet levels on 14 - 15 January.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
18 January - 13 February 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at low levels with a chance for isolated M-class activity from Region 1401, 1402 (N27, L=215, class/area Dho/270 on 15 January) and old Region 1389 (S23, L=087), which is expected to return to the visible disk on 21 January.

No proton events are expected at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at normal flux levels during 18 January - 03
February. Normal to moderate levels are expected from 04 - 07 February following a CH HSS. Normal levels are expected for the remainder of the period.

Geomagnetic field activity is expected to be quiet on 18 January. Conditions are expected to be at quiet to unsettled levels with a chance for isolated active periods on 19 - 20 January due to a CME observed early on 16 January. Mostly quiet conditions are expected to return from 21 January - 01 February. Quiet to unsettled conditions are expected from 02 - 04 February due to a recurrent CH HSS. Predominately quiet conditions are expected from 05 - 08 February. A second CH HSS is expected to become geoeffective on 09 February bringing quiet to unsettled conditions. Mostly quiet conditions are expected on 10 - 11 February before becoming quiet to unsettled for the duration of the period due to a third CH HSS.

Because the media billionaires strongly desire multiracial,
"diverse" societies, and fear nationalism -- because nationalism might strip them of their ill-gotten money and power, as it has again and again throughout history.

So, to the extent that they think they can get away with it, they cover up the dark side of multiracialism.

With all good wishes,

Kevin Alfred Strom.

Thank you for your thoughtful reply. In my scholarly research searching for answers to why a nation as powerful as the USA consistently and blatantly acts against the best interests of its citizenry I discovered the following website; http://www.jewwatch.com/

It is astonishing how a brazen minority comprising roughly 2.5% of the population dominates nearly every meaningful institution in the country. How can this be? How has this come to pass? How can this be ended?

These are just a few of the questions that I have sought answers to without success. Any insight anyone can shed upon this problem would be most welcome.

Isn't it interesting that the political hacks in D.C. want to cut health care to America's senior citizens but aid to the Jewish state of Israel is so untouchable it isn't even a topic for discussion.

The figures cited in the article are 10 years old so the sum total is actually much higher. This is simply astonishing.

Do you want a "good" antenna or do you want an "active" antenna. I'd experiment with loops before I gave up. Active antennas are expensive and noisy, unless you get the really outrageously expensive ones.

It's not being addressed because it's not true.

You mean you couldn't tell when you were being snookered into an advertising campain?

If you couldn't tell during the execution....you should have been able tot ell by the results.

Many surveys have been done by individual stations...not by iBiquity.

They are proprietary...and not used as "selling points" as the one you mentioned is.

If you were involved with EIGHT...maybe more? Then there was something wrong with the mthodology of this survey...and I highly doubt the subject, sponsors or the results.

Even yet another case where you're denying a simple truth.
Stations ARE processing their HD streams. Sometimes as heavily as their baseband streams. Which, with increased distortions and digital artifacts from the lossy encoding algorithm, makes for some pretty poor, significantly audible, unclean audio.

Most, however, do.

And of the stations I work with, the call, every week from Programming, and Manglement, is for more processing.

Something I have to adjust everytime I go up to the transmitter.

Now, I, personally, agree with Brenda Ann...there is really no need for it, with today's audio, and with today's listening environments...but Radio has never heard it that way.

So, manglement calls for more processing on the HD Streams.

Yes, it does happen. It happens quite a lot, actually.

Not at all. 6 were in other markets. 2 were followup studies.

You're not familiar with the way this kind of survey is done.
Rarely just one. Never in a single location. And about 1/3 of the time with a current followup to note trends in response, or changes in perceptuals.

Actually the purpose was to determine the minimum bit rate at which HD could be broadcast where listeners still gave it high marks for audio quality. They performed the bit-rate testing for different genres of music, and for voice, so stations could determine optimal bit rates for their HD sub-channels. Most stations chose to not go beyond HD2 (HD1 same as analog channel) and one HD2 music sub-channel. There are areas where there is voice on the sub-channel (sports, religious broadcasts, etc) where an HD3 sub-channel is acceptable. Once you get below the mid 40's then listeners perceive lower quality audio.

The mistake many people make is trying to claim that just because the audio is perceived as near CD quality by listeners, that the compression scheme actually results in audio that is not near CD quality. The fact is that the broadcasters care about what their listeners perceive, not what an audiophile might discern, and not what a techie with a spectrum analyzer might figure out.

Every in-depth test of HD Radio, and every casual evaluation by testers from publications like the WSJ and CR confirms that HD Radio audio is perceived as being much higher quality than FM. Of course much of the reason for this may be that so much FM sound so bad due to multipath.

Sorry, no one has provided any evidence to show that to be the case. It may be something that they desperately want to believe, since as you've seen some people will fall for anything (witness the claims of HD interference caused by a central valley AM station which does not even broadcast in HD).

It's almost time for the CME impact. Today at 2230UT +/- 7 hours is predicted arrival time. So if the net gets blacked out tonight look outside for some nice auroral displays.

369. Latest Liberty Net via WB4AIO

Liberty Net: January 14, 2012

http://3950.net/2012/01/liberty-net-january-14-2012/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

ITï¿½S NOT ALWAYS EASY to find a clear frequency for the Liberty Net, but one thing youï¿½ll notice is that our net is one of the very few that does not merely fire up on an accustomed frequency, but instead is frequency-flexible. That means youï¿½ll have to search for us ï¿½ almost always between 3950 and 3990 kHz LSB ï¿½ but W1WCRï¿½s signal is strong and distinctive, so we shouldnï¿½t be too hard to find.

Hereï¿½s a small sample of what youï¿½ll hear on our latest recording:

ï¿½ Be prepared for even more inflation as the Fed, and the banks that control it, start more ï¿½quantitative easingï¿½ under the banner of ï¿½QE3? ï¿½ meaning that the oligarchs will get trillions in free money, while the people hold fewer and fewer dollars, each of which is rapidly dropping in value. (14 minutes)

ï¿½ More and more companies, though nominally ï¿½private corporations,ï¿½ have in reality become creatures of the banks because of the mountains of debt that have been loaded upon them by corporate raiders. (22 minutes)

ï¿½ Even though the Jewish power structure is the main backer of multiracialism and unlimited immigration into the formerly-White West, in Israel itself there are stricter and stricter controls on immigration, and intermarriage between Jews and members of other races is legally constrained. (27 minutes)

ï¿½ Speaking of Israel, why is it that we spend trillions of dollars and sacrifice thousands of lives in fighting wars for that country ï¿½ yet they do not contribute a single soldier or a single dime to those efforts? (32 minutes)

ï¿½ The load of debt that the bankers have placed on the backs of European countries has resulted in at least a half dozen of them now having credit ratings as low as that of Kazakhstan. (39 minutes)

ï¿½ Itï¿½s amazing the lengths to which the Republican establishment ï¿½ which is controlled by the same money-men who control the other party and the major media ï¿½ will go to denigrate Ron Paul and minimize his successes. (47 minutes)

ï¿½ One of the most brilliant up-and-coming artists active today is David Dees of Dees Illustrations (http://www.deesillustration.com/). His works can make a complex political or philosophical point evident in a single glance, and have the ability to move our hearts and uncloud our eyes in a way that no written or spoken text can ever do. (52 minutes)

ï¿½ There is a revolution brewing in the life extension field ï¿½ telomere reset therapy, developed in part by Cold Spring Laboratories, promises to reduce or even eliminate cell senescence. (1 hour 5 minutes)

Remember that you can find ï¿½ and check in to ï¿½ the Liberty Net on a clear frequency around 3950-4000 kHz LSB every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time, or you can listen live on the Internet at http://3950.net/live ï¿½ or listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted here at http://3950.net every week.

Thanks to W1WCR for running the Liberty Net, and thanks to all of you for checking in and making t net what it is today!

Since nine tenths of the mass media are dominated by one particular ethnic group, and since they control these staged "debates," the answer should be obvious. It is also the reason your brother or son just died in some stinking hole in the Middle East.

No they are not. Most research indfividual station do is never released to the public.

It is for internal strategic decision making.

You're correct. In all my years in broadcasting, I have never heard of such a silly way to do a "survey".

Don't draw any conclsuions from it.

Which must be why the phrase 'most people in listening tests prefer...' has never appeared in any promotional material.

Research is never released. But that's a strawman argument.
Certainly no station releases raw Arbitron data, for instance, But interpreted results are always used in promotional and sales. There is no reason otherwise to spend the money to do them.

Again, a strawman argument. Even material used for internal decision making is eventually sold to the public.

Perceptuals find their results in promos stating "we asked and you said..." "Playing YOUR favorites."

Perceptuals, and surveys find their way into sales pitches at ad agencies.

Your attempts to derail responses to a fictitious followup belie your intent to have a reasonable discussion.

Every station I (as someone currently working in the industry) work with, running HD, processes their HD audio. Quite heavily, and often to the same level as the baseband audio. this, so that there isn't such a difference in the audio output when the receiver drops the IBOC stream in favor of the analog audio. Which happens quite a bit.

We'll print out and hand over any arbitron info requested.

There are plenty of reasons to do research that you don't release.

If it's research into what agencies want...then yes.

The methodology is flawed? Because the survey was conducted in multiple markets? Hardly. That's like saying Arbitron's PPM is flawed because it's used in more than Chicago. Nonsense.

You're suspect of any conclusions because they don't agree with your pre packaged claims.

> a silly way to do a "survey".

Which, then, says a lot about your experience.

You should do some, sometime. It's pretty fascinating stuff. At CBS, we did perceptuals at least once a year. Sometimes twice. Just to keep track of trends, and to see how tastes were evolving.

And music surveys are done with greater frequency. In different locations. I worked at one station that did callout music research every night.

My company prepares music clips for callout surveys almost constantly for stations in markets across the country.

What's interesting is the variation is responses, by market, to a given song.

When taken in context with the wider picture, the local snapshot reveals even more about local tastes, public expectations, and public perceptions based on cultural norms all of which are locally shaped.

In every market where 'HD radio listening test' surveys were conducted in which I was involved, the tests were conducted according to iBiquity's requirements, the participants selected according to iBiquity's criteria, and the results tabulated and interpreted by iBiquity's specifications.

As was posted here...the tests were rigged in iBiquity's favor, sonically, and those with experience, trained ears, or musical abiltiy were eliminated from participation, and the results weighted in favor of HD radio.

There is a reason that engineers at HD stations are contractually prohibited from criticizing HD radio, and HD radio performance. There is a reason why stations who discontinue HD broadcasting are pursued by iBiquity's legal department to force them to return to participating in the HD radio scam.

And there is a reason why criticism of such an obviously flawed system produces this blizzard of fanboi responses quoting iBiquity pamphlets, memoes and newsletters.

The truth requires none of these things. Only a promotional scam requires such tactics. In the same way only the Tobacco industry required an industry run Tobacco Institute to protect industry interests against the mountains of evidence against it.

IBiquity's tactics amount to a kind of strongarming for which Sarnoff has been excoriated in this group for his treatment of inventions of other men, like Armstrong and Farnsworth.

In time, there will be an accounting. Sadly, it will take too much time. And both the broadcasting industry and the FCC has too much invested here to see, or hear the truth about this system. But just like even the Tobacco industry, the truth will out, and there will be an accounting.

What damage is wrought in the interim, will remain to be seen.

But, as you, yourself have admitted, there is a waning of public interest in all things Radio....not just shortwave, that has not rallied even with DRM, but with AM and FM broadcasting...and the public has an eery ability to find, or create alternatives to things that they don't like, or things that they once loved, that have been screwed with until they no longer serve the needs of the pubic, or things that they've lost interest in. And Radio will be no different. Radio will find that it's relevance is reduced, as lighter, more responsive, and more personally customized sources for entertainment and information become available.

And, in time, Radio will find that it's no longer the dominant medium. And that no one but Radio cares about that fact.

Even today station content is available from multiple sources, all producing less than survivable revenue. Even as I write this, I'm listening to a station in Louisiana, while my wife, at her office listens to a station in Indianapolis. Neither of us are using radios. And we both can take these stations with us on our cell phones. With unlimited plans, or even the new larger data plans by AT&T and Verizon, there's no reason to fear streaming your favorite stations, now. And the stations themselves?

Well, they'd better find ways to either monetize their streams, OR find a way to provide compelling listening content to draw listeners to their terrestrial transmitters.

Or, like two stations here in Chicago....Radio will be moved to the internet, or another alternative, as an interim step to being moved out of the public ear entirely.

And in none of these scenarios does HD radio play a part. It's just another one of all things Radio that even you agree, the public is losing interest in.

D. Peter Maus.

I do VO's as a part of my businesses. I'm also build studios, work with Radio on audio, it's engineering, and one of my businesses is, in fact, in providing the manpower for research efforts, and converting those to real and useful results.

And you don't want to know my homeruns in advertising.

I do speak from experience, here. And the authorititative statements I make are backed by decades of experience.

In markets starting with Chicago, and working my way outward.

But, I'm not the subject of this conversation. HD radio is, and the fact that you have turned this into a discussion about me, underscores my point that you really aren't interested in the discussion...only in silencing dissent when your premises are flawed.

I've exposed the flawed source, and your mis-statements.

Ah...so this is discussion is now about me.

Yes, I do VO's. I'm also a photographer. And an engineer. And a consultant drawing on more than 50 years of experience in Radio and TV.

And I have two businesses, one that supply manpower and coordinative effort for the execution of research surveys, both focus group perceptuals and street level research. And the other that conceives, produces and excecutes advertising campaigns.

So, before you talk out of your ass again, you may wish to consider what you don't know about your correspondent.

Finished my VO's by 6am this morning. I get up early.

Wrote several memoes and two letters of recommendation.

Finished a proposal for a syndicated show hitting the air in February for prospective advertisers by 8:30.

Video meeting with a GM at 9

The aerial photo shoot was cancelled due to the weather.

My people are putting together a focus group for this evening.

And I'm having dinner with a fiddle player from the Old Towne School at 7.

It's actually as slow day.

What...no stations to manage, today?

There is a reason for an army of HD Haterz. Most are old timers who have latched onto the past.

I recall people who didn't want us to use Stereo....because "stereo degrades the signal".

They are all gone now. ;-)

HD is not a miracle. It simply adds some functuionality to the radio.

It's not enough to turn back the disinterest in the AM band...

You misunderstand...I was helping with the execution of the surveys.
Like you, I don't participate as a respondent, but as one conducting the tests, or managing the results. (But never both, btw.)

>> My company prepares music clips for callout surveys almost constantly >> for stations in markets across the country.
> Wow...making music clips? That makes you an expert?

LOL! That's only part of the involvement. We're also instrumental in the execution strategy of the survey process, itself. Again, not as a respondent. But the company has a lot of involvement in callout research.

And the reason I got involved in research, is because, as a disc jockey, I was forever being told that 'research tells us...' usually why we COULDN't do something that was creative, or innovative. Or why we had to do something that made no sense, or conflicted with some other tenet of the format. Like going on 20 seconds every time we opened a mic about how we were the 'less talk leader.'

So, I wanted to see for myself, how this 'research' was conducted and how the results were interpreted, and used. Probably a holdover from the form the interest I developed during the research I did in college. In the process, then and since, I got involved in a LOT of research. And watched a lot of methodolgies developed and executed. And got involved in a lot more.

To date, I've not been invited, nor have I offered, to be a respondent in any research. I don't even answer callout surveys when they buzz my house, or answer exit poll questions on Election Day.

Where I'm involved, like you, is in the execution of the research survey. And I've got a huge interest in watching how surveys, like the iBiquity sponsored HD surveys, were influenced, and managed to outcome.

You are so screwed up, when it comes to US Radio Law, you wouldn't know the REAL FACTS, if they bit you in the Arse....

First Off: What Cops, are saying WHAT, about which Frequencies?
Be VERY specific....
Second Off: It would be VERY hard to a local prosecutor to try such a case, even in a local Court, KNOWING that it would likely be overturned in the first Federal Court where the case landed.
Third Off: Local Cops, and even State Cops, do not have jurisdiction in the enforcement of FEDERAL Laws, and should they try, the local Federal Marshal would slap them down in a nanosecond. That is HIS Job.
Fourth Off: Cops can, and do, say a lot of stuff, about which they have NO CLUE, just like YOU do. Just because some local IDIOT
LEO says something, does NOT make it True, or in fact Legally, the LAW. I have testified in MANY Courts of Law on just these kinds of issues, and mostly the local LEO has it WRONG, and the IDIOT Prosecutor, gets his hands slapped by the local Judge, once the correct FEDERAL Statutes, are introduced into Evidence, if it ever actually gets that far, in the first place.....
I mean REALLY... Duh....

first off, radioguy is a frickin ignorant asswipe, second off, local cops enforce federal law every day of the year.

e.g., a convicted felon is found with a gun. that's a federal law.
when sworn in they take oaths to "uphold the laws of the United States and the US Constitution....".

US marshalls rarely deal with cops who enforce the law.

Read the constitution. You will find that sheriffs are the law.
It's only when you have assholes like Eric Holder running the country do you hear them whining about local cops enforcing federal law.

Were this the case, and it is not, my cleaning up the gene pool observation is even more appropriate. Anyone that stupid forfeits the right to exist. I humbly suggest to their downtrodden brothers that they shoplift a can of sterno instead of stealing high voltage power cables to heat their supper.

Perhaps the below snippet explains how any post exposing the parasitism of the Jewish state of Israel is immediately met with a barrage of name calling from the "chosen ones".

From Wikipedia:
"In addition to traditional media, Israeli public relations on the internet also is targeted with software called the Megaphone desktop tool http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Megaphone_desktop_tool, which is designed and promoted by pro-Israel interest groups.[59] Regarding the 'Megaphone', the Times Online reported in 2006 that the Israeli Foreign Ministry "ordered trainee diplomats to track websites and chatrooms so that networks of US and European groups with hundreds of thousands of Jewish activists can place supportive messages."[60]
According to a Jerusalem Post article on the 'Megaphone', Israel's Foreign Ministry was "urging supporters of Israel everywhere to become cyberspace soldiers 'in the new battleground for Israel's image.'"[61] Chris Williams wrote for The Register: "However it is used, Megaphone is effectively a high-tech exercise in ballot-stuffing. We're calling it lobbyware ."[62]

Kent, the boy is a fruit cake.
What he's talking about here is the two frequencies are actually shared with both ham and police. But some police departments feel because they use it, you can't.

Local and State Cops Do NOT enforce Federal Law... They enforce State Law... What you cite is cases where BOTH State and Federal Statutes prohibit a convicted Felon from possessing a Firearm, and the local or State cops are enforcing the State Statutes, NOT the Federal One.

> US marshals rarely deal with cops who enforce the law.

apparently you have never dealt with a US Marshal... I have, many times, as a Resident Field Agent for the FCC, reTIRED... and know exactly of what I speak..... When on land, the US Marshal provides any muscle needed for ALL Federal Agencies that do not have Police Powers, inherent in their founding Statutes. On the water, it is the USCG, that provides the enforcement function, for any Federal agency, that doesn't have Police Powers. Nobody messes with a Federal Marshal. Their Police Powers are valid anywhere inside US Territory, Period... including Military Bases. The USCG has those same Police Powers on ANY navigable body of water, for US flagged Vessels, as well as foreign vessels inside US Territorial waters, PERIOD... No one messes with a USCG Boarding Party, either...

and they are WRONG, and any enforcement action by some local or State Cop, would be thrown out by the first Court of Jurisdiction, when the Relevant Statutes, and FCC Regulations, are presented to the Judge. If not there, then the first Appeals Court. Usually these things never make it to a Court, as the Prosecutor doesn't want to be overturned, or laughed out of Court, for not knowing the relevant Statutes, in the first place.

Weekly Highlights and Forecasts

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
16 - 22 January 2012

Solar activity reached moderate levels as Regions 1401 (N18, L=213, class/area Eki/540 on 19 January) and 1402 (N28, L=214, class/area Eko/630 on 17 January) both produced M-class events. Region 1401 produced an M1/1n on 17/0453Z and an M1/1n on 18/1912Z. Region 1402 followed with an M3/2n on 19/1605Z. The 19 January event was associated with and Type IV radio emission and a full halo CME. Type II emissions were detected on 19/1252Z and 19/1933Z with speeds of 933 km/s and 694 km/s respectively. Partial halo CMEs were also observed on 16 and 18 January. Activity decreased to very low levels late on 19 January. Isolated low-level C-class flares were observed on 20 - 22 January. Plage Region 1396 (N27, L=287, class/area Dao/110 on 17 January) produced a C1 flare at 20/2112Z associated with a Type II radio sweep (945 km/s) and a non-Earth-directed CME. Region 1402 produced a long-duration C1 flare at 20/2333Z associated with a weak Type IV radio sweep.

An enhancement of the greater than 10 MeV proton flux at geosynchronous orbit began around 20/0800Z and continued through the end of the period.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at normal to moderate levels the entire period.

Geomagnetic field conditions ranged from quiet to unsettled levels, with a brief excursion into active-major storm levels at high latitudes on 22 January. Field conditions were predominately quiet from 17-21 January. On 22 January, an interplanetary shock passed the ACE spacecraft at approximately 22/0514Z, likely indicating the arrival of the full-halo CME observed on 19 January in LASCO imagery. This was followed by a geomagnetic sudden impulse (SI) at 22/0614Z (31 nT observed by the boulder magnetometer). Field activity increased to unsettled to major storm levels at high latitudes following the SI.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
25 January - 20 February 2012

Solar activity is expected to be low with M-class flares likely until Regions 1401 and 1402 depart on 28 January. Predominantly quiet levels are expected for the remained of the period.

Protons greater than than 10 MeV are expected to remain above event threshold from 25 - 26 January. A return to background levels is expected for the remainer of the period.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at normal to moderate levels the entire period.

The geomagnetic field is expected to be at active to minor storm levels on 25 January as effects from the CME from 23 January wane. Quiet levels are expected on 26 January. Quiet to unsettled levels are expected on 27 January as a coronal hole high speed stream (CH HSS) becomes geoeffecitve. A return to quiet levels is expected until 02 - 03 February, with quiet to unsettled levels expected as another CH HSS becomes geoeffective. Predominantly quiet levels are expected from 04-08 February. Another CH HSS is expected to become geoeffective with quiet to unsettled levels expected from 09-10 February. Predominantly quiet levels are expected for the remainder of the period.

So you are a member of the Tea Party and you vote. Wonderful. Thanks to you slack jawed yokels the country is now inflicted with Harry Reid as leader of the Senate for another six effing years. His defeat was a foregone conclusion last November, only a miracle could save his career. Alas, the nation would finally be rid of the empty suited moron forever.

But you geniuses managed to perform the miracle by digging up a tin foil hat candidate that made Sarah Palin look like Einstein by comparison. A corpse could have beaten the bimbo you idiots choose to run against Reed (same story in Delaware as well).

Yet another reason why IQ tests need to being administered before voting rights are granted.

From the US Amateur 70cm bandplan at the ARRL website:

70 Centimeters (420-450 MHz): 420.00-426.00 ATV repeater or simplex with 421.25 MHz video carrier control links and experimental

426.00-432.00 ATV simplex with 427.250-MHz video carrier frequency

No flame war, just askin'...

One more thing while we are on the subject of "moral character".

During the last debate, the moderator asked Gingrich a question relating to Newt's moral character, a question about what Newt's Wife #2 said.

Newt said it was "despicable" (his word) that the moderator asked the question.

Newt, you want "despicable"?

How about when you went to Wife #1, the mother of your children, and served her with divorce papers on her hospital sick bed while she was suffering from cancer.

Now that's DESPICABLE.

Three hundred and thirty million people in this country and those klowns are the best candidates the Republican Party can come up with?

Newt DID have three wives and he DID cheat on the first two. (I wonder if wife #3 is seeing a pattern here?)

Newt was the FIRST and ONLY Speaker of the House to be brought before and fined by the House Ethics Committee.

Newt was attacking Clinton for having an affair with Lewinsky while HE HIMSELF was having an extra marital affair.

So, I think the above CLEARLY illustrates Gingrich's moral character -- or should I say lack thereof.

Why don't the missionaries or someone set them up to make some old time tube radios which need a lot of labor to make and sell them over here? Since all humans have equal intelligence and capacity then they should be able to put them to work at a rate they will be grateful for, is how I see it.

Honestly, it's because there is no market here for them. Good old faded memories, people forget the reason why tube radios stopped being made.. and the answer is simple... transistor radios were superior in every possible way, more reliable, less drift, didn't break down as much, more portable, and cheaper to build.

If there was a market for tube radios, they would still be made somewhere.

I have the CCrane-SW. AM and FM are very good. Shortwave prone to overload, especially when used with an external antenna even with it grounded, even with the gain turned way down. Nice sound.. And I got a AN-200 loop antenna that helps it along on AM. At $79, a good price.

If there was a market for tube radios, they would still be made

Transistor radios began taking a significant share of the market only after they got either 1) significantly smaller or 2) significantly cheaper than tube radios.

In reality, good tube SW sets were, and still could be, better than solid state sets. This was particularly true of consumer grade sets that had lousy intermod and overload specs (I've had plenty of mid-60's to 80's consumer grade SW radios that not only received a given SW station in multiple spots on the dial, but also received FM radio and TV signals on the SW bands (needless to say, they were NOT copyable.)

I'll grant they were more portable, and became much cheaper to build, but as for build QUALITY, that wasn't so good, unless you had something like a Royal 7000 or something higher grade like a Kenwood or Icom or Yaesu. SS SW radios drifted as bad as any tube set, but for a slightly different reason.
It still had to do with heat, but since the radio itself didn't generate much, external heat was the culprit. Even the venerable Superadio series is very prone to drift with just the temperature extremes between night and day.

I concur! The down side is the loop is one plate of a large capacitor.
It is easily charged by the occasional low, charged cloud or when the cloud releases it's load of charged rain or snow. I have a large DPDT switch in the 600 ohm feed line to ground the antenna. Can draw up to 1/4 inch arcs to ground.

IOW, "Arky Bob" is an alcoholic?

The students know the rules before they sign up. If they don't agree with them they can go elsewhere.

I drink, and I smoke cigars. I don't do it on my employer's property because they prohibit it. I could go to work elsewhere and be allowed to smoke cigars outside the building: I don't know anywhere in America you can drink alcohol on premises at a workplace, except a brewery maybe. In Germany the union demands the employees get a beer at lunch if they want. Comparing the average qualities of German and American products it would seem a sensible policy, but I don't make the policy.

Fundamentalist churches who teach that "the Bible is against alcohol" or "Jesus changed the water into grape juice" are either lying or incredibly poorly educated/trained, but that's their prerogative.

My former boss was a Mormon bishop who once a year would ostensibly go "on a spiritual retreat". He would go to Monte Carlo in France, (he had Big Family Money and LV has too many Mormons to guarantee his anonymity) get stinking drunk, and have relations with a couple of women he'd pick up, and gamble a thousand bucks or so. The other fifty-one weeks a year he was a True Blue Mormon. This seemed reasonable to me: he was decent to work for and had a fine family.

If the students at ORU get a good education for their money and are employable that is all that matters. AFAIK the school is academically respectable.

There is a demand :I want one and so do a few other cranks, survivalists and nostalgia buffs.

Whether that's a BIG ENOUGH demand is questionable.

Solid state receivers can be better in some ways, but in practice often they are not. Tubes DO have some advantages such as dynamic range. In practice, even good solid state radios have faults modest tube sets didn't.

A good radio can be built either way. A solid state GOOD radio is going to use a lot of devices though. A good tube radio can be built with ten tubes.

The world worked just fine on tubes for some 70 years, before some wise guy came along and decided that they were bad and that they could make something better.

In fact, tubes has a service life.
Lets say the life of a properly cared for tube is about 40,000 hours.
Little things like turning off the radio and turning it back on again and not letting the tubes properly warm up - were detrimental to tube life.
You maybe got 15,000 hours out of a tube before its effectiveness began to fade.

Tubes do not like to be stored in a cold place and they do not like to be dormant. A old tube - still in the box isn't always a good tube, even when properly tested. You go to ham radio swap meets all the time and there is always someone there that collects tubes and has bins full of them.
You get all excited because they have the tube you are looking for, only to bring it home and it doesn't work as well as the original tube the radio came with. That is because the tube is old and the tubes life has been reduced by the way it was stored. It needs to be used at least once every 12 months, 6 would be even better.

People wants everything now and they don't want to wait for the tubes to warm up to talk on their nets. They want to turn the radio on, say their call sign and no traffic and turn the radio off.
The drive for a miniaturized 12 volt mobile radio was the reason why the transistorized radio became so popular.

You need to remember that all this radio crap comes from Japan and China and Korea and third world countries for a reason, and the reason why radios were not improved sooner was all due to the US government.

From the 1960's when President Kennedy said we are going to put a man on the moon, the US Missile program consumed all of the transistors produced in the USA from that point right up to the 1990's.
By that time, the foreign markets had already monopolized the market to the point of where no one else could enter it competitively.
About the only mass produced equipment made in the USA that was even close was probably the Heath Kit stuff and other radio manufacturers of the day.

Even Motorola tried to get into the Ham radio market not too long ago and they only produced one or two models of radio, before they realized that the cost of production was so high that they could not be competitive and they quickly got out of it.

Back in the day, a relative of mine worked for GE.
GE made some of the best radio equipment out there, including the Mastr II repeaters. If you listen to the old recordings of the Apollo program, you will hear the little beeps between transmissions. Then you listen to your local repeater and you hear the same little beeps - why - because that repeater was a GE series repeater which was re-purposed to be used for amateur radios.

GE was electronically correct.
Motorola was politically correct.

GE built things that worked, their motto was - we bring good things to life.
Motorola crossed all the T's and dotted all the I's and they ended up being the company which the US Government called upon to produce the equipment they wished to purchase.
It wasn't because the Motorola stuff was better, just because they knew how to do business in the USA.
Make it good, make it cheap and pay the graft and corruption money and keep your mouth shut.
If you sell a $50,000.00 radio unit to a local government, you need to bid it at $65,000.00
Install it for $50,000.00 and kick back $10,000.00 to the local officials to get the contract.
That is the reason why our country is so broke today and the reason why government officials spends millions of dollars to get a job which pays $150,000.00 or less per a year.

Some of this is true and some of this is bullshit.

GE is a cancerous megamonolith that needs breaking up into many smaller pieces. That said they did, and still build a few halfway decent things, like jet engines and locomotives, but most of their consumer stuff was always shit. With a few specific exceptions.

The missile program never did consume all or even a majority of US semiconductor output. They did wind up spoiling the semiconductor houses badly, but when Apollo and Vietnam wound down they were in serious trouble. The Japanese had the market for linear analog parts by the balls, and they were selling most of it not as parts but in consumer products, often at prices designed to undercut the US industry. The US semi houses had to go into digital and microprocessors and this turned out to be financially smart for them, a big win for Intel in the long run and Motorola for a while too.

The mass market does not care about radios per se. I am talking here about a small niche market.

Readers of this newsgroup understand that you are an elderly prescription drug addicted curmudgeon who often posts while in a drug addled fog.

However there is really no defending your blasphemous and distasteful invocation of the Holy Bible to wish death on President Obama, widowhood for his wife Michelle and orphanage for his two daughters Malia and Sasha.

Yes that is exactly what you are doing with your smug and unoriginal citation of Psalms 109. Contextually, the passage continues; "Let his children be fatherless, and his wife a widow." How Christian of you.

I suggest you continue reading Psalms 109 to verse 29:" Let mine adversaries be clothed with shame; and let them cover themselves with their own confusion, as with a mantle."

You are beyond shame but are indeed in a constant state of confusion so at least you receive half credit.

Wow! You are all over the map. I guess your philosophy is that a moving target is more difficult to pin down, because cognitive consistency doesn't seem to be one of your skill sets.

Per usual you are wrong "Professor". Because I am too complex to be neatly labeled or categorized does not make me inconsistent. That you don't understand me is your problem not mine.

By the by, one constant of my "philosophy" always has been, and forever will be, is never to wish death upon another human being. Doing so makes for very bad karma.

Nor will I succumb to the human disease of hate which only destroys oneself not the target of your venom. It is like drinking poison and expecting the other person to die.

Now exercise your cognitive ability and acknowledge (to yourself, the rest of us don't care) that your best course is to limit your musings to shortwave and leave the psychoanalysis to actual Professors.

Consider my sage advice a gift from Professor Truth Teller's Finishing School because I am now finished with you. Good day sir.

Ancient Egyptians were considered a totally separate race in antiquity . Are you refering to contemporary/modern Egypt that has a very substantial Arab admixture?

Wow! You are all over the map. I guess your philosophy is that a moving
target is more difficult to pin down, because cognitive consistency

Liberty Net: January 21, 2012

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

2012 is beginning as a real growth year for the Liberty Net, as the number of check-ins and the length of the weekly sessions keep growing. Always remember that my summaries here can only barely touch on the subject matter brought up ï¿½ and give only a hint of the honest and heart-felt way it is presented. Listen: Liberty Net 1/21

Hereï¿½s a small selection of what you can hear on our latest recording:

ï¿½ Iceland refused to bail out the banksters and was threatened with severe retaliation. So far, thereï¿½s been no severe effect and business is quite good in that plucky, independence-loving nation. (10 minutes)

ï¿½ The most fraudulent holiday with the phoniest ï¿½heroï¿½ ever vended to us by the regime has got to be ï¿½Martin Luther King Day.ï¿½ See http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EELhEguhU8M for more details. (17 minutes)

ï¿½ The regime is spending $1.6 million to restore six ï¿½Chicano muralsï¿½ in San Diego which promote the takeover of California by Communists and Mestizos. Ostensibly, this project is ï¿½enhancing the transportation infrastructureï¿½ of the region. (21 minutes)

ï¿½ Hats off to the developers of the Firefox plugin ï¿½De-SOPA,ï¿½ which automatically routes you around any governmental interdiction of ï¿½forbiddenï¿½ domain names. (53 minutes)

ï¿½ Thereï¿½s a war going on in Chihuahua, Mexico ï¿½ and more people have been killed there than have been killed in Afghanistan. Why, then, are we sending troops to protect the unworthy state of Israel all over the Mideast when this conflict in nearby Mexico is spreading into our own nation? (54 minutes)

ï¿½ Iceland isnï¿½t the only country thatï¿½s pushing back against the bankersï¿½ rape of Western economies: In Ireland, there is a growing ï¿½Not Our Debtï¿½ campaign, which is fighting the tax-funded bailouts of the misleadingly-named ï¿½Anglo-Irish Bank.ï¿½ (1 hour 6 minutes)

ï¿½ Want to really understand the brouhaha about the Keystone Pipeline? Think oil going to China ï¿½ and Chinese-held dollars going to Canada. (1 hour 24 minutes)

ï¿½ Unnatural foods ï¿½ and the omnipresent high fructose corn syrup ï¿½ are taking a toll on our health, and probably our mental functioning too. The average weight of an American woman in the 1950s was 112 pounds. It is now 168. (1 hour 38 minutes)

ï¿½ Thereï¿½s now a smartphone ï¿½appï¿½ which helps pedestrians and drivers avoid high crime areas. Of course, since everyone knows that ï¿½high crime areasï¿½ are areas where non-Whites of equatorial origin live in large numbers, the app has been decried as ï¿½racist.ï¿½ What is really needed for such areas is an app which converts your smartphone into a .38 caliber revolver. (2 hours 3 minutes)

You can find the Liberty Net on 75 meters, almost always somewhere between 3950 and 3999 kHz SSB, every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time. Please check in, and also listen and chat live on the Internet via http://3950.net/live every week. The full audio files are usually posted to our archive on the Sunday morning following the net ï¿½ youï¿½ll always see the latest file near the top of the right column ï¿½ just click to listen or download.

Thanks to W1WCR for running the Liberty Net for over three decades!

In rec . antiques . radio+phono there's a discussion of a Western Electric ERPI audio power amp that sold for north of thirty grand to some rich oriental collector. Have you looked into the phenomenon of Audiophiles in general, and this Japanese/ other Asian obsession with this old Western electric theater gear, from the perspective I know you have and which I somewhat share?

It wasn't something Dr. P ever talked about because he had way bigger fish to fry....but it is interesting, yes?

Ezekiel 23:19-20

19Yet she multiplied her whoredoms, in calling to remembrance the days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt.

20For she doted upon their paramours, whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

In other words, for you dense people, she was a slut that wanted guys with dicks like donkeys and who shot a huge load when they came.

Yes, this is distasteful....but it's in the BIBLE. Go read it.

http://www.biblegateway.com/passage/?search=Ezekiel+23%3A19-20

You can go there and see it in 15 or more English versions. In most it is the same except for a couple of words.

One slightly different:

Ezekiel 23:19-20

New Century Version (NCV)
19 But she remembered how she was a young prostitute in Egypt, so she took part in even more prostitution.20 She wanted men who behaved like animals in their sexual desire.

Sad to say many are turning out for the likes of Romney and Gingrich.

It is not fraud to strategically reregister. I do it all the time.
BTW Ron Paul is the only semi-sane candidate out there. The rest are worthless, especially Gingrich.

Reliable sources have informed us that this past weekend there were over twelve billion listeners on board for The Great Liberty Nit-Wit-Net. Among them were (as usual) Bill Clinton, Henry Kissinger and the entire Obama family. Including President Obama's relatives who now reside in the USA as illegal aliens.

Perhaps the absense of a qulified proclaimer has not had the negative impact on listership that we expected.

You probably won't believe the above, so let me give you a quote from an article in the Republican, conservative Wall Street Journal of January 24, 2012, page A17:

Here is the closing line of that article.

Weekly Highlights and Forecasts

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
23 - 29 January 2012

Solar activity ranged from low to high levels. Region 1402 (N28, L=214, class/area=Eko/630 on 17 January) produced a long duration M8/2b flare at 23/0359 UTC. Multiple radio emissions from 25 MHz to 15.4 GHz, including a 5100 sfu Tenflare, and a Type IV sweep were also observed. Finally, an approximately 1600 km/s asymmetric full-halo coronal mass ejection (CME) was seen in SOHO/LASCO C2 imagery beginning at 23/0412 UTC. Activity returned to low levels as Region 1402 made its way across the visible solar disk producing occasional low to mid level C-class flares. On 27 January, Region 1402 moved to N29W71 before producing an X1/1f flare at 27/1837 UTC. Radio phenomena, including a Type II (1523 km/s) and a Type IV radio sweep with an 810 sfu Tenflare accompanied this flare. An asymmetric halo CME was later observed in LASCO C2 coronagraph imagery with an estimated plane-of-sky speed near 2000 km/s. Region 1402 rotated off the west limb on 28 January. Region 1402’s counterpart, Region 1401 (N18, L=213, class/area=Eki/540 on 19 January) was the second largest and most magnetically complex (beta-gamma) region on the disk during the period. Region 1401 was only responsible for a couple of low level C-class flares during the period. Region 1401 decayed to spotless plage on 26 January.

Energetic proton flux levels reached strong levels during the period as two proton events energized the Earth's magnetosphere. The first event began minutes after the M8/2b flare on 23 January. The 10 MeV proton flux crossed the 10 pfu event threshold at 23/0530 UTC. The 10 MeV protons increased steadily to a peak flux of 6310 pfu at 24/1530 UTC, following the arrival of the interplanetary shock. This 10 MeV proton event ended at 27/1025 UTC when the enhancement dropped below the 10 pfu level. This 10 MeV proton event was the largest enhancement since Oct 29, 2003 (29,526 pfu) and the 11th largest since January, 1975. Also with this event, the 100 MeV proton flux exceeded the 1 pfu threshold. The 100 MeV flux began at 23/0445 UTC, increased to a peak of 2 pfu at 23/0750 UTC, then steadily declined until it dropped below the 1 pfu threshold at 23/2050 UTC. The second event began on 27 January, after the X1.7/1f flare. The 10 MeV proton flux crossed the 10 pfu event threshold at 27/1905 UTC. The 10 MeV protons increased steadily to a peak flux of 796 pfu at 28/0205 UTC. The 10 MeV proton event was still in progress at the time of this report. The associated 100 MeV event began at 27/1900 UTC, reached a maximum of 11 pfu at 27/2140 UTC and ended on 28/2120 UTC.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit began at background levels, but increased to moderate levels late on 23 January. Values increased to high levels on 27-28 January, before decreasing to moderate levels through the end of the period.

Geomagnetic field activity ranged from quiet to minor storm levels at mid-latitudes and briefly reached severe storm conditions at high latitudes. The magnetic field was mostly quiet on 23 January with an isolated minor storm observed at high latitudes from waning effects from a CME. On 24-25 January, activity increased to isolated minor storms at low latitudes and severe storms at high latitudes, due to the arrival of a CME, associated with the 23 January M8/2b flare. An interplanetary shock was observed at the ACE spacecraft at 24/1431 UTC followed by a 37 nT increase in total field, as measured by the ACE spacecraft, at 24/1439 UTC. A corresponding sudden impulse was observed in the Boulder magnetometer with a 22 nT deviation at 24/1504 UTC. Solar wind speed, as measured by the SOHO spacecraft, was approximately 750 km/s at the time of the shock passage before decreasing to approximately 650 km/s. The geomagnetic field decreased to predominantly quiet levels for the remainder of the period.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
01 February - 27 February 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at very low to low levels from 01-09 February until old Regions 1401 and 1402 are due to return. Solar activity is expected to increase to low levels with a chance for M-class flares and a slight chance for X-class flares for the remainder of the period.

The greater than 10 MeV proton flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to remain elevated from 01-02 February but below the 10 pfu threshold values. A return to background levels is expected from 03-08 February. On 09 February, old Regions 1401 and 1402 are due to return to the visible disk. From 09 February until the end of the forecast period, there will be a slight chance for a proton event.

The greater than 2 MeV electrons at geosynchronous orbit are expected to be at normal to moderate levels for the entire forecast period.

The geomagnetic field is expected to be at predominantly quiet levels for the entire period. Quiet to unsettled levels are expected on days 03-04 February, 09 February, 12 February, and 23 February.
This increased activity can be attributed to multiple, recurrent coronal hole, high speed wind streams.

What the New Testament says about bigotry:

Bigotry: "Then Peter opened his mouth, and said, Of a truth I perceive that God is no respecter of persons: But in every nation he that feareth him, and worketh righteousness, is accepted with him." (Acts 10:34-35) "My brethren, have not the faith of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Lord of glory, with respect of persons. For if there come unto your assembly a man with a gold ring, in goodly apparel, and there come in also a poor man in vile raiment; And ye have respect to him that weareth the gay clothing, and say unto him, Sit thou here in a good place; and say to the poor, Stand thou there, or sit here under my footstool: Are ye not then partial in yourselves, and are become evil thinking judges?" (James 2:1-4)

The Punxsy wireless society is proud to announce that they are going to have a special event station to run the day of Groundhogs day Feb 2, 2012

I hope to have someone on or about 14.235 or 14.265 plus or minus 10 kc's

I also hope to work a little 10 meters - 28.400 USB plus or minus 15 kcs

If neither band works, we will move to the 40 meters band, somewhere around 7.150 mhz LSB.

There will be a certificate which will be sent via email, no cost to you.
Both amateur radio operators and ham radio listeners are encouraged to participate.
The certificates will be sent according to email or the number you were issued.

Phone line as SW antenna

Changes preceded by "|".

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area.
Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines | usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead.
Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should
| be rated 250 volts or higher.

Phone line RF connector
red .01 uF center cond. / \
or o--------||-----------------------------|-o | To receiver
green \ /
50 ohm coax |
ground |
or o-----------------------------------------+ N.C. shield

N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:

Phone line RF connector
red -------- center cond. / \
or o----| |-------------------------|-o | To receiver
green | | \ /
| FILTER | 50 ohm coax |
ground | | |
or o----| |----------------------------+
N.C. -------- shield
```

| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good | performance, are well-built and affordable:
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)

```

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):
| Model 182A beverage matching unit

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------
```

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

From: bill@videovax.tv.tek.com (William K. McFadden)
Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Hmmm...Obama -created- high unemployment you say?

Unemployment is due to the big financial crash, which if you will recall, started in 2007/2008, on George W. Bush's watch. So, if you are debating who "created" it, you should give Mr. Bush his due credit.

Yet another incredibly short memory.

For the diminishing number of you who are still interested, here's a link to a review comparing one of the Wellbrook loops to Pixel Technology's RF Pro-1A magnetic loop antenna:

I still prefer a tuned, passive loop to the amplified, broadband variety.

Thanks for the comparison link,. I've been waiting for this and maybe a few more antenna comparisons as well.
There was one advertised recently and I remember it was a piece of coax that you could lay around the apartment and it supposedly gave you remarkable results for around $75 plus shipping CONUS. I've done a search of cable antennas but cannot find it now. Perhaps you or someone can remember this.
Anyway thanks for your time.

The PAR EF-SWL is actually a random wire with a very well made matching transformer. It is likely to be a very good antenna of its type. The antenna "radiator" is not a coax, but a plain insulated flex-weave wire, designed ideally to be suspended at some height above the ground. If installed properly, it should provide a good signal to noise ratio.

The Wellbrooks are somewhat more elaborate designs, amplified magnetic loops. They work very well in RF-noisy places, but you pay for compactness and performance.

Liberty Net: January 28, 2012

http://3950.net/2012/02/liberty-net-28-january-2012/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE LIBERTY NET has been through several transitions, from its early days in the 70s, through the dawning of the Internet and digital recording, and now enhanced through full integration with VoIP and Web 2.0 technology. These additions let amateur operators who are temporarily off the air participate, and the online streaming and archived recordings make the net almost impervious to jamming.

Hereï¿½s a sample of what youï¿½ll hear on this weekï¿½s Liberty Net recording:

ï¿½ A court in Georgia has ordered the current occupant of the White House to appear and answer questions about his qualifications to serve as President. Obama, however, has brazenly flouted the order, saying through his mouthpiece that he was ï¿½terminating his participation in this proceeding.ï¿½ (23 minutes)

ï¿½ A textual analysis of the latest State of the Union address indicates that it was written to match an 8th grade level of comprehension. (26 minutes)

ï¿½ Googleï¿½s new ï¿½privacy policyï¿½ really amounts to a ï¿½tracking and spying policy,ï¿½ and with Googleï¿½s history of cooperating with the Beijing and Washington regimes, it gives one pause to consider cancelling all Google and Google-related accounts like Gmail, Blogger, and YouTube. (41 minutes)

ï¿½ Some states, like Illinois, in their zeal to outlaw the use of cell telephones while driving, have perhaps inadvertently outlawed mobile amateur radio use. The law in Illinois exempts ï¿½emergencyï¿½ and ï¿½law enforcementï¿½ radio users, creating the dangerous precedent of a privileged class for which there is no possible legal justification. (56 minutes)

ï¿½ Two high-privacy alternatives to Googleï¿½s search engine are http://dogpile.com and http://startpage.com . (1 hour 15 minutes)

ï¿½ ACTA, the ï¿½Anti-Counterfeiting Trade Agreementï¿½ is being quietly pushed through Congress. It will empower the regime in Washington ï¿½ and even other governments ï¿½ to shut down any Web site they choose, making it even more dangerous than SOPA and PIPA. (1 hour 16 minutes)

ï¿½ Just as he is becoming increasingly vocal in his support of Ron Paul, radio host Alex Jones seem to be getting more and more over-the-top hysterical about other issues during his radio show. Is this a coincidence? (1 hour 21 minutes)

ï¿½ Some are predicting that within two decades, 90 per cent. of the Washington regimeï¿½s air forces will be robotic, and 70 per cent. of its ground forces will be at least partly robotic. If we get our country back again, we need a Constitutional amendment forbidding such weapons from ever being used against us. (1 hour 23 minutes)

The Liberty Net is a gathering that includes thoughtful, philosophical minds and well-informed sources every week, and any amateur operator can join in the discussion and debate. A big ï¿½thank youï¿½ to W1WCR for his hard work which makes the Liberty Net possible. You can download an mp3 recording of the Net right here at http://3950.net and listen in your gym, or on your way to work, or anywhere you choose.

Well it's only 15 minutes till RRROOOOLLLLL CCCCAAAALLLL to call to order the Feb, 4, 2012 editoin of The Great Liberty Nit-Wit-Net.

N4SX in Downtown Washington, DC will probably not be on board to help with the jamming responsibilities, as his amplifier is a little under the weather lately.

Too bad Sir Sidney has gone on to That Great Ham Shack In The Sky.

His insightful comments were an inspiration to us all.

If you need a "quiet" antenna, go for a loop. I had a home brew loop that worked well, though I had to use a preselector with it. It was almost like a miracle. Because it was a shielded loop, there was almost 50dB less noise, and good directionality.

I made the thing from 5/8 copper tubing and some 8 AWG electrical cable. I just put the cable inside the copper tubing, then connected the three wires in series, soldered one end to the tubing and connected the other end to the center of a piece of RG-8 (RG-8X is just as good and much easier to handle) and clamped the ground braid to same place as the wire attached to the tubing. This was a 4' loop, so worked as well at MW as SW. Unfortunately, I don't have it anymore because the harsh climate destroyed it after only a couple years.

This I'll try. 'Doesn't matter about spacing at the loop ends just as long as they're not touching, 1 or 2 inches? I have a rotor that I bought at a Radio Shack clearance for a project like this. This should help a bit with reception as well.
I heard of someone using a hula hoop for something like this but copper tubing I guess makes it a magnetic loop, which I hear is best for a low noise antenna? Still use the balun?
A thousand thanks for the instructions.

Justis,

Try a single turn Horizontal [Flat] Loop Antenna using a Coax Cable RG6 'Quad-Shield' [72 Ohm] and a 4:1
Matching Transformer. -versus- a Long Wire Antenna

Use a single insulated multi-strand wire for the Antenna
Element; or use 300 Ohm [TV] Twin Lead run as a parallel [2] wire single turn loop.

Any 3~4~or~more points to mount the Loop will do
Does not have to be a perfect circle or square.
Does not have to be perfectly flat generally horazontal
will do.

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
30 January - 05 February 2012

Solar activity ranged from very low to low levels throughout the period with two C-class flares observed. Region 1410 (N18, L=056, class/area Cso/240 on 01 February) produced a C1 event at 0440Z on 30 January. The second event was also a C1 flare, at 0441Z on 01
February from Region 1408 (N06, L=132, Class/area Hax/120 on 21 January). Low level B-class activity dominated the remainder of the period. As the summary period ended, there were only three spotted regions on the visible disk, with Regions 1413 (N08, L=062, class/area Csi/100) and 1410 the most pronounced.

The greater than 10 MeV proton event which began at 27/1905Z and reached a maximum of 796 pfu on 28/0205Z, dropped below the 10 pfu threshold and ended at 31/0635Z.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit reached high levels on 30 January at 1635Z. Predominantly background levels prevailed with moderate levels observed from 03 - 04 February.

The geomagnetic field was at predominantly quiet to unsettled levels during the past week. The geomagnetic field was quiet, until the arrival of a glancing blow from the asymmetric halo CME that occurred in association with the X1/1f flare on 27 January. The transient passage was observed by the ACE spacecraft at 30/1554Z with a solar wind speed increase from around 320 km/s to near 430 km/s. A weak sudden impulse measuring 8 nT was observed by the Boulder magnetometer at 30/1624Z. The field increased to unsettled levels following the shock but returned to quiet levels by 31/0000Z.
Quiet conditions prevailed on 31 January. On 01 February, a coronal hole high speed stream became geoeffective with unsettled to minor storm levels observed at high latitudes and predominantly quiet levels observed at mid latitudes from 01 February through the end of the summary period on 05 February.
```

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
08 February - 05 March 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at very low to low levels until 10 February, when old Region 1402 (N28, L=214) returns. An increase to low levels with a chance for M-class activity is expected as old Region 1402 transits the visible disk. A decrease to very low to levels is expected to prevail for the remainder of the period.

Energetic proton flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to remain near background levels until old Region 1402 returns on 10 February. A slight chance exists for a proton event from 10 -24 February, as old Region 1402 transits the solar disk. A return to background levels is expected for the remainder of the period.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at normal to moderate levels throughout the period.

The geomagnetic field is expected to remain at mostly quiet to unsettled levels through the forecast period. There is potential for active periods with isolated minor storm periods at high latitudes on 09-10 February, on 23 February, and again on 02-03 March, due to effects from coronal hole high speed wind streams.

The PAR EF-SWL is actually a random wire with a very well made matching transformer. It is likely to be a very good antenna of its type. The antenna "radiator" is not a coax, but a plain insulated flex-weave wire, designed ideally to be suspended at some height above the ground. If installed properly, it should provide a good signal to noise ratio.

The Wellbrooks are somewhat more elaborate designs, amplified magnetic loops. They work very well in RF-noisy places, but you pay for compactness and performance.

Thanks RHF, looks like I just might be able to tame some of the noise after all. I know it's best to have a good receiver and that it's only half the battle. Not much good without a "good" quiet antenna as well. I was getting pretty discouraged trying to listen to weak stations with all the man-made noise in the area. I think this group may have set me on the right path for more quality listening. Thanks for sharing your expertise.

Justis,

Try a single turn Horizontal [Flat] Loop Antenna using a Coax Cable RG6 'Quad-Shield' [72 Ohm] and a 4:1
Matching Transformer. -versus- a Long Wire Antenna

Use a single insulated multi-strand wire for the Antenna
Element; or use 300 Ohm [TV] Twin Lead run as a parallel [2] wire single turn loop.

Any 3~4~or~more points to mount the Loop will do
Does not have to be a perfect circle or square.
Does not have to be perfectly flat generally horazontal
will do.

If I had to vote in a GOP primary, I'd probably write in Huntsman. He's the only one of the entire bunch that WERE running this year that was worth a spit in the ocean. For starters, what we have left is basically religious right nutcases (and Ron Paul, who has a lot of baggage of his own). I believe in God, and love Jesus, but I don't want his so-called representatives running my country. That way would inevitably lead to a rebirth of the Inquisitions.

Brenda,
I kinda, sorta agree with you about Huntsman. He was the only one in a field of klowns that seemed to have his head screwed on more or less straight.

However, IMHO, his platform had one major flaw: He was FOR Ryan's plan to privatize Social Security and Medicare.

What's wrong with that you ask?

Well, it shows a severe lack of understanding of history and why Medicare was created in the first place.

The private insurance industry (the one Ryan wants to turn Medicare over to), realized that old people got sick much more often than younger people and thus the cost of health care for the elderly was either outrageously expensive or just plain unobtainable.

Thus LBJ (yeah, THAT crook) created Medicare because the private insurance industry dropped the ball -- yes, the same private insurance industry Ryan wants to have run Medicare today. As older people still get sick more often, I don't see the insurance industry acting any differently now than they did back then.

As to privatizing Social Security (like W. Bush wanted to do), well, it was a good thing W. didn't get his way. If he did, 99% of us would have been wiped out in the crash of '08.

Final note: To those who insist on calling Medicare and Social Security "entitlement" programs, please DON'T. They are funded BY OUR OWN MONEY, that we paid into for years; there is no "entitlement" about it.

I received this from Allen Pits, W1AGP. Allen is the Media and PR Manager for the ARRL.

A major opportunity came up today, and you can take part in it....

SATURDAY Feb 11 at 4-10 PM CENTRAL

YOU ARE INVITED TO SHARE THE MAGIC OF AMATEUR RADIO AND HF BROADCASTING TO A WORLD WIDE LISTENING AUDIENCE.

FROM 4 – 6 PM / 2200 - 2400 UTC THE FREQUENCY IS 9990 KHZ

THE CALL IN NUMBER IS 615-547-9520

Call in and talk about:

WHAT YOU LOVE ABOUT AMATEUR RADIO,
YOUR FAVORITE MODES,
YOUR LOCAL AMATEUR RADIO CLUB AND ITS ACTIVITIES, YOUR PERSONAL ACCOMPLISHMENTS IN AMATEUR RADIO

It is not very often that you can hear a new HF shortwave radio station sign on the air. WTWW a new International Shortwave Radio facility just outside of Nashville, TN is launching a new transmitter this Saturday with a broadcast we are calling “This Is Only A Test” starting at 4 pm Central Standard Time. This is a 100,000 watt (wow!) transmitter running into a full size rhombic antenna! They need to test it -and while they are at it Ted Randall has set things up for hams to talk about Amateur Radio.

This is a global radio event with radios being tuned in all over the world.

The QSO radio show has requested hams to call in as a amateur radio event to promote amateur radio along with shortwave listening. Why?
Well, the shortwave listening audience is huge and the typical shortwave radio listener is a great potential candidate for amateur radio. There are more than 1.5 billion shortwave receivers in use worldwide, the BBC estimates that at any given moment, over 200 million sets are tuned to shortwave broadcasts.

This is the second time WTWW has allowed us to conduct this kind of broadcast on a powerful new shortwave facility. The purpose of this broadcast is to demonstrate HF communications … and to put radio amateurs on the air to a worldwide audience to tell their story.

By the way… this particular broadcast is not a commercial venture in any way. Maybe later it will be (they hope!) but not yet J So spread the word and call in on Saturday to “This Is Only A Test” and talk to the world about Amateur Radio!

I have a Grundig Yacht Boy 400 and a month ago the power connection from the wall wart broke off at the tip so I couldn't solder in a new connection. So I went to my local used items place and bought a wall wart with the proper voltage and I had to flip the wires to make it the right polarity. Anyway, I get a click click click sound in my radio on most AM stations. Only if they are close by or in higher freqs. does it get better. Now I'm wondering if the wall wart that came with the radio had some sort of by pass filtering in it. How can I get rid of this. It doesn't do it when I run the radio on batteries, and it is not the area of my house as I have played other radios with no interference. This does not happen on FM. Are there better wall warts that are made for radios? I suppose the one I got came out of some kids toy car and was as cheap as they come. Do you folks out there have any ideas? Thanks in advance.

Anyway, I get a click click click sound in my radio on most AM stations. Only if they are close by or in higher freqs. does it get better. Now I'm wondering if the wall wart that came with the radio had some sort of by pass filtering in it. How can I get rid of this. It doesn't do it when I run the radio on batteries, and it is not the area of my house as I have played other radios with no interference. This does not happen on FM. Are there better wall warts that are made for radios? I suppose the one I got came out of some kids toy car and was as cheap as they come. Do you folks out there have any ideas? Thanks in advance.

Arista sells some pretty good universal wall warts. Multi voltage, swappable tips (either polarity) and they're voltage regulated. I used one with my YB400 for almost as long as I had it, and never had any complaints.

They're available at most big chain stores (Wally World, Target, etc.)

Yes, some universals are switchers, but some are linears with separate taps.
Look for a heavy linear at your rated voltage. Some radio stores used to sell "radio rated" wall adapters. Or check your local thrift store, they often have a box full of discarded wall warts.

Liberty Net: February 4, 2012

http://3950.net/2012/02/liberty-net-february-4-2012/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THERE ARE MANY MORE free forums in America today, thanks to the Internet, than there were twenty years ago ï¿½ and the tremendous cachet of pro-peace and pro-freedom candidates is one evidence of this. Alternative politics are bigger than they have been in a long time, and Liberty Net participants are proud to have been one of the pioneering groups to bypass the censorship of the controlled media. And, even after 38 years, the Liberty Net is still going strong!

Hereï¿½s a small sampling of what youï¿½ll hear on this weekï¿½s recording:

ï¿½ When the Croatian government exerted pressure on its citizens to get them to vote to join the EU, it is one of the few instances of rats jumping _onto_ a sinking ship. (2 minutes)

ï¿½ So far in 2012's ï¿½recovery,ï¿½ seven banks have failed ï¿½ and many times that number are about to fail. (12 minutes)

ï¿½ Sugar is energy, and energy is necessary for life. So, using the obesity epidemic as an excuse, the oligarchs (and their governments and corporations) are now moving in to regulate and control it ï¿½ just as they are trying to control all other forms of energy. (14 minutes)

ï¿½ In Florida, there has been a spate of savage attacks on Whites by Black gangs, including one on a 13-year-old girl ï¿½ and there is very little interest from the national media. Even in cases where the Blacks have screamed anti-White slurs as they attacked, the cases are never categorized by the police as ï¿½hate crimes.ï¿½ (30 minutes)

ï¿½ The ï¿½Department of Homeland Securityï¿½ (DHS) has been setting up false accounts on Twitter in order to ï¿½followï¿½ and spy on American citizens ï¿½ and quite possibly act as agent provocateurs to put innocent people in jail. They have set up filters looking for certain ï¿½suspiciousï¿½ words, including ï¿½illegal immigrants,ï¿½ ï¿½drill,ï¿½ ï¿½collapse,ï¿½ and quite a few others. Patriots are pranking the illegal DHS spies by purposely writing tweets that include all of these keywords. (36 minutes)

ï¿½ Speaking of Twitter, why is that company now cooperating with _some_ governments that want to impose censorship and filter certain topics out of the online conversation ï¿½ and cooperating with efforts of the Washington regime to overthrow others? (44 minutes)

ï¿½ Kevin Burmeister, one of the founders of Skype, says that governments and major ISPs are now secretly working to redesign Internet routing in such a way as to allow any desired Web site to be removed from the ï¿½Net, with all persons trying to visit such ï¿½forbiddenï¿½ sites automatically redirected to an ï¿½approvedï¿½ one ï¿½ with ISPs getting a monetary payoff for ï¿½cooperating.ï¿½ (46 minutes)

ï¿½ Why are so many people so gullible as to fall for the same ï¿½Weapons of Mass Destructionï¿½ scam that fooled us into war with Iraq, but this time with Iran? Surely, low-IQ American voters are the best friends the warmongering oligarchs ever had. (50 minutes)

The Liberty Net ï¿½ amateur radioï¿½s longest-running current events discussion net ï¿½ is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on or around 3950 kHz SSB (lately itï¿½s been higher in frequency ï¿½ as high as 3993, but more often around 3980 ï¿½ to avoid interference). Youï¿½ll have to tune around, but itï¿½s not hard to find!

Remember, thanks to N2SAG (Alï¿½s alternative audio feed is active again ï¿½ use it conjunction with http://3950.net/live and youï¿½re likely to be nearly interference-proof!) and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen live ï¿½ and chat live ï¿½ via the Web whenever the Liberty Net is on the air. And, as always, you can download the net recording right here at http://3950.net and listen at your leisure.

Back in the early '60s the FCC made a rule that you could not run the same programming on your AM station as was on your FM station, most of the time. A lot of Newstalker blowtorches are on both AM and FM signals. (Reagan dropped the rule). We need to liberate these blowtorches for the people and leave the hate radio on the FM, with all the other bullcrap.

KSL is the biggest offender.

Let us know when you get the funds to "liberate" a blowtorch or two.

Perhaps "liberate" was a poor choice of words on Dave's behalf, but the idea is a sound one.

The (no) duplication rule was brought about for a sound reason: to give FM radio a chance to flourish on it's own. Without it, FM would have died back in the 60's without ever garnering an audience. Now, it may be a good idea to bring it back, but for the opposite reason: to give AM a chance at a comeback of sorts. Bringing back the rule would make big corporations like Entercom, Disney, Clear Channel, et. al. either create programming that listeners will listen to (and advertisers will support) or give up those AM plants to someone that WILL. The only logical reason they are keeping them once they move the content to FM is to freeze out competition

Disagree, the only thing that would do is kill AM off even quicker. FM dominates every market out there now and stations stuck on AM are very wise to simulcast on FM as well. The problem is, no one wants to buy AM stations anymore, and the market each year continues for fall for AM.

Hey don't get me wrong, I love AM radio and listen and dx it all the time. But I also realize what the facts are about AM, it is a dying breed.

Perhaps Dave meant exactly what Dave said. A single narrow ideology (that incidentally favors fat cat station owners) dominates the political speech on the Peoples' airwaves. This tends to damage democracy and warp the political scene. It figures that certain mouth breathers would take offense; I'd be surprised if they didn't.

Fellow Drake Enthusiasts,
The NEW R.L. Drake Virtual Museum is here http://www.drakemuseum.com . It's being launched page by page. You may follow my work at the new webiste.

The R.L. Drake Virtual Museum is under construction so there's not much there yet, but "stay tuned" ! Please observe that links in the menu is activated when the pages are ready to be presented.

The former R.L. Drake Virtual Museum http://www.dproducts.be/drake_museum/ has been closed.

Thanks to all the 450.000 vistors!

The main reason for closing it, is that my friend who I had the website together with, passed away last Christmas.

I have decided to build up a NEW Drake Virtual Museum from scratch. It will contain a lot of new pictures and info in addition to what were found in the former museum.

Welcome to The (NEW) R.L. Drake Virtual Museum www.drakemuseum.com

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
06 - 12 February 2012

Solar activity began the week at moderate levels due to an M1/Sf flare produced by Region 1410 (N18, L=056, class/area Cso/240 on 01 February) at 06/2000 UTC. Activity levels decreased to very low to low levels for the remainder of the week. Noteworthy events include a long duration C7 limb event from Region 1410 at 07/2219 UTC, and a CME associated with a filament eruption at 10/1154 UTC. Region 1410 produced a long duration C7 limb event at 07/2219 UTC.

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit started the period at normal background levels, increased to moderate levels on 07 February, and reached high levels on 08-09 February. The electron flux returned to moderate levels for the remainder of the period.

The geomagnetic field was at mostly quiet levels for the majority of the period. There were a few periods of unsettled to active conditions at mid-latitudes with active to minor storm conditions at high latitudes, early in the week on 7 and 8 February. This activity was associated with solar wind speeds between 450-500 km/s and periods of southward Bz. Mid-day on 09 February, unsettled to active periods were observed at high latitudes due to the arrival of a co-rotating interaction region followed by a weak coronal hole high speed stream. From late on 09 February until the end of the period, mostly quiet conditions prevailed.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
15 February - 12 March 2012

Solar activity is expected to be low with a slight chance of M-class activity until Region 1419 rotates off the visible disk on 26 February. Very low to low levels are expected to prevail for the remainder of the period.

No proton events are expected at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at low to moderate levels.

Geomagnetic field activity is expected to be at mostly quiet levels throughout the period, with the exception of any currently unanticipated future CME events. Increased field activity due to recurrent disturbances is expected on 18-19 February, 23 February, 2-3 March, and 7 March.

 Attention Beginning Monday, March 12, 2012, the Weekly bulletin will now be issued and available on the SWPC web page every Monday morning by 1500 UTC.

Those frequencies are ok if a person wants to listen to those schedules, but I am not sure if amateurs in the USA is permitted to operate on those frequencies.

Anytime you want to talk, come on down to the 10 meters, or 15 or 17

Many fewer stations now carry CTC. Cumulus now runs right wing hate speech overnight (Redeye Radio) and some Clear Channel stations are running it too. I now listen to the BBC overnight.

Liberty Net: February 11, 2012

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THIS WEEK MARKED the return of Al, N2SAG ï¿½ one of our most interesting speakers and longest-term participants ï¿½ to the Liberty Net after a too-long absence due to a change of QTH. Welcome back, Al!

Hereï¿½s a small selection of the issues debated and discussed on the Liberty Net this week:

ï¿½ Two more banks have failed this week alone ï¿½ making a total of 39 US bank failures this year; and 154 more are on the death-watch list. This is even more egregious than you might think, since itï¿½s not that easy to fail when you have a license to print money. (15 minutes)

ï¿½ Is the new ï¿½Obamacareï¿½ health care model really a new incarnation of supply side economics? After all, how better to reward suppliers and control buyers than by requiring that a product be purchased? (19 minutes)

ï¿½ When you involve yourself with the current regime ï¿½ whether through licensing, ï¿½benefits,ï¿½ or even marriage ï¿½ you are opening up yourself to an ocean of controlling regulations and uncaring, petty bureaucrats who will have power over your life. (28 minutes)

ï¿½ While you were sleeping, watching American Idol, or mourning crack-using celebrities, pretended laws were enacted that make it ï¿½legalï¿½ for the regime in Washington to use drones to spy on you or kill you at will, without any charge or any trial. (31 minutes)

ï¿½ The noose of censorship is tightening in America, as two of the last non-neocon, non-Zionist conservatives ï¿½ Judge Napolitano and Pat Buchanan ï¿½ have now been removed from the airwaves. (36 minutes)

ï¿½ The ï¿½zero toleranceï¿½ policies that many schools have instituted are now approaching near-insanity, with both a five-year-old with a fast-food-style plastic knife and a 17-year-old with a table knife in their lunch boxes (the latter had accidentally picked up her fatherï¿½s lunch bag) being expelled or actually arrested for ï¿½weapons violations.ï¿½ (52 minutes)

ï¿½ Is real marriage something that exists in the hearts of a man and a woman? ï¿½ or is it a contract that requires a governmental piece of paper? (1 hour 8 minutes)

ï¿½ The criminal FBI is now classifying mundane, perfectly legal activities as ï¿½suspicious potential terrorist behavior,ï¿½ and is asking businessmen to report customers who pay in cash, people who like to browse Google Maps, and hundreds of other innocent things. Visit http://publicintelligence.net to see the latest hysterical propaganda put out by these thugs. (1 hour 11 minutes)

ï¿½ Could we be being set up by the neocons for another Bush presidency? Thereï¿½s a move afoot to push Jeb Bush as a ï¿½saviorï¿½ at the upcoming Republican convention. (1 hour 36 minutes)

The Liberty Net is on the air every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time on or around 3950 kHz SSB (lately itï¿½s been higher in frequency ï¿½ as high as 3993, often around 3980 ï¿½ to avoid interference).

Remember, thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen live ï¿½ and chat live ï¿½ via the Web whenever the Liberty Net is on the air; visit either the http://3950.net/live feed or N2SAGï¿½s Stickam feed. And, as always, you can download the net recordings right here at http://3950.net and listen at your leisure.

Yes, even old Western Electric and RCA intercoms -- and knobs, for heaven's sake -- are going for crazy, astronomical prices. Some of the old gear sounded really good, to be sure. But it's become a tulip-bulb-craze type phenomenon -- a mostly psychological money/status thing...

Steve, just got an email from a friend. He says R.L.Drake was bought by some sat-TV eq. company out of New Jersey. Have you heard any info on this? I'm good on my Drakes right now, but wondering about parts down the road. Nothing on the yahoo group.
I figured you would be the go-to-guy on all things Drake.

Ouch! End of an era. I didn't know, guess I need to spend more

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
13 - 19 February 2012

Solar activity was very low to low all week. The largest flare of the entire period was a C1 on 19 February at 0851 UTC from Region 1422 (N15, L=177, class/area = Dai/60 on 19 February). B-class flares dominated the rest of the summary period.

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at normal to moderate levels during the summary period.

Geomagnetic activity began on 13 February with quiet to unsettled conditions at mid latitudes and active to minor storm levels at high latitudes, associated with a small coronal hole high speed stream (CH HSS). 14 February saw a brief return to quiet conditions. The respite was short-lived, however, when a slow CME observed on 10 February finally arrived at Earth on 15 February. Active to minor storm levels were observed at mid latitudes throughout the day, while high latitude activity peaked at major storm levels. The remainder of the week was quiet until late on 18 February when a co-rotating interaction region preceded a geoeffective CH HSS.
Unsettled to active conditions with isolated minor storm periods were observed during 19 February due to CH HSS effects.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
22 February - 19 March 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at low levels throughout the forecast period.

No proton events are expected at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at high levels to begin the period due to effects from a recurrent CH HSS. Normal to moderate levels are expected to prevail from 23 February - 19 March.

Geomagnetic field activity is expected to be mostly quiet on 22 February. Quiet to unsettled conditions are expected on 23 - 25 February due to the onset of a recurrent CH HSS. A return to mostly quiet levels is expected on 26 February through 01 March. A CH HSS is expected to become geoeffective on 02 - 03 March, thus increasing activity to quiet to unsettled levels. Predominately quiet conditions are expected from 04 - 06 March before another CH HSS provides unsettled conditions on 07 March. Conditions are expected to return to mostly quiet levels from 08 March - 10 March, before another recurrent CH HSS is expected to become geoeffective on 11 March, with unsettled conditions expected for the day. A return to mostly quiet conditions is forecast from 12 - 16 March, before another CH HSS is expected to produce quiet to unsettled conditions with a chance for isolated active to minor storm levels at high latitudes for the remainder of the period.

 Attention  Beginnning Monday, March 12, 2012, the Weekly bulletin will now be issued and available on the SWPC web page every Monday morning by 1500 UTC.

Anything American-made ,prior to about 1970 was of exceptional quality . Ever seen an Andrea television from the inside ?
Personally, I never liked RCA . Most of their stuff was mass market oriented . Majority of their transformers (both power ans well as audio) looked and behaved appropriately . The vacuum tubes were much better, most of the time, but not always ... Now WE was the real stuff . It was meant to be run around the clock . And it did , with flying colors . And it still does . Fifty+ years later.

Rickmers, do you have even the slightest idea of what a 'tuning knob' or an 'on-off' switch is for?

You are certainly in the running for yet another Golden-Come-Along Award and here it is only late February.

I am monitoring a s-9 audio morse code transmission on about 5.799 MHz
It is not a CW signal as no BFO is needed to hear it. It is a scrambled/coded transmission and appears to be random letters but is not 5 letter groups.
Any ideas???

After searching around I have determined it was a Cuban "cut number"

It was so strong I was receiving it on my rxvr with the antenna

Sounds like the IF circuit has gone bad. If this is an old radio the only solution is to fix it or buy a new radio. If it is still under warranty send it in for repair.

That's a classy operation for a CBS property. KFI already pays for a news person for overnight; they should just get one that can take calls and pontificate as well, and people who want George Noory can listen on KFBK.

If you read reviews of the 909, FM overload is a common complaint in urban areas. I think the recommended fix is to just shorten the antenna under these conditions. An intesresting test would be to compare different stations on the 505 with a fully extended antenna and the 909 with 1 section extended. Let us know the results.

It could be long path skip or short path skip over the N or S pole depending on the antenna orientations. The most interesting is when you hear an echo and you are receiving both paths at different times.

Greetings Fellow Knob Twisters!

I came across a number station that I have not heard before although most of you may have. It is in English a mans voice and he sounds very much North American to me. He calls both numbers and letters running through them twice. The frequency is 6.739 mgz. He is probably using a beam as his messages are definetely being sent to various locals. Anyone else hear this one before and have any knowledge of it? Enjoy your twisted knobs! kg4gfu. Jon Boy.

KTLK doesn't really have much of a signal where I live. Phil Hendrie is out of KTLK.

I'm kind of burned out on politics right now; getting ready for one of those "long hot summers" (look it up). The people united will never be defeated. Eat the rich. Break up JP Morgan.

Thom Hartmann and Norman Goldman are a couple good hosts. Hartmann's also on RT America TV and YouTube.

KOA JIPs Coast to Coast at Hour 3, kind of cheesy. But anything to get Brownie to shut up.

696. Latest Liberty Net via WB4AIO

Liberty Net: February 18, 2012

http://3950.net/2012/02/liberty-net-february-18-2012/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

EVERY WEEK, the amateurs who participate in the Liberty Net get a chance to discuss issues of importance outside of the sandbox of the controlled media. Of course, one can do that on the Internet too, but the Liberty Net doesnï¿½t depend on servers and backbones that can sometimes fail ï¿½ or be shut down. And one can experience the true personalities and voices, and honest feelings, of real people ï¿½ in a way that typing on a message board just canï¿½t match.

Hereï¿½s my selection of a few topics that were brought up during this weekï¿½s Liberty Net session:

ï¿½ When Greece lost the ability to control its own money supply ï¿½ giving that power to the bankers when it joined the misnamed ï¿½European Unionï¿½ ï¿½ it also lost its freedom. Now is the time for Greece, and all nations, to shake off the bankersï¿½ shackles. (12 minutes)

ï¿½ How can enforcers for the regime in Washington charge someone in a foreign country with a crime, merely for linking to material on his Web site that is in the public domain in that country? Easy. The DC regime has decided it can charge and extradite you in that situation as long as you are using a ï¿½dot-comï¿½ domain name. (18 minutes)

ï¿½ The would-be food police are now proposing heavy taxes on sweet foods and drinks, in a ploy to take our money and further control every kind of energy. Apparently theyï¿½re unaware that orange juice has more sugar per ounce than soda. (21 minutes)

ï¿½ Some Swiss banks have now ceased to do business with the US entirely, because of the intrusive, dictatorial, and immoral behavior of the regime in Washington ï¿½ which is now defining anyone, anywhere, who owns any US-based securities as a ï¿½person of US interestï¿½ and demanding financial records on them. (31 minutes)

ï¿½ Did Whitney Houstonï¿½s death have anything to do with the fact that she was in debt for many millions of dollars? Few know it, but she had been selling off huge quantities of her recording studio equipment on Ebay for months. (53 minutes)

ï¿½ The Washington regime is bowing to the inevitable and to our impoverishment by cutting the size of the US nuclear arsenal. But patriots shouldnï¿½t be misled into thinking that this somehow ï¿½makes America weak.ï¿½ The regime in Washington is the worst enemy ever faced by Americans, and the fewer nuclear weapons it has the better. (59 minutes)

ï¿½ Now that net participants are armed with Beverage antennas and excellent receivers and transmitters ï¿½ and Internet adjuncts that allow us have a backup feed/patch on Skype, and also allow us to pick and choose the receiver with the best signal ï¿½ jammers now find it almost impossible to affect the communications on the Liberty Net. (1 hour 14 minutes)

ï¿½ Now thereï¿½s been yet another alleged incident involving literally trillions of dollarsï¿½ worth of counterfeit US bonds discovered in Italy that, we are told, criminals were trying to use as collateral to obtain bank loans. The last time this happened ï¿½ also in Italy ï¿½ a couple of years ago, the story and the supposed criminals and bonds disappeared from the radar in just a few days. (1 hour 17 minutes)

Thanks to N2SAG and N2IRJ and W1WCR, you can listen to the Liberty Net every week ï¿½ somewhere near 3950 kHz, plus or minus the interference (lately, substantially above that frequency) ï¿½ every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time, and also via the Web. You can also download the Liberty Net right here at http://3950.net and listen in your car, at work, or wherever you like. Check in on the air and join the excitement!

Emergency Attention Message?

Theoretically transmission of a certain alpha sequence, (changed daily), indicates a heightened state of alert or an actual breakout of hostilities. Most EAMs are less important.

Like an EBS closed circuit test that broadcasters had to do, when we actually got to open the big envelope.

Yeah, seems there's a never ending supply of clown 'tards these days.

I think there is factory in California that keeps churning them out.

Classic unsubstantiated and erroneous claim, laced with invective, as expected from someone who lacks a logical argument.

Hello,

Anyone know of an "inexpensive" Downconverter that would enable the hearing of vhf/uhf Aero frequencies on a sw radio that presently goes up to the typical 30 MHz ?

Thanks,

No ideas off the top of my head for UHF, but the VHF air frequencies are pretty easy. A standard FM radio can be easily modified to receive those, sometimes by merely spreading the coils and doing a simple alignment. Then, if you wish to listen on your SW, just tap off the IF strip and tune in on 10.7 MHz.

ARRL manuals from the 80s to 90s had practical downconverter circuits. I've listened to single channel air bands, so I suggest the OP try a wide band scanner. eBay usually has a selection, such as

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
20 - 26 February 2012

Solar activity was at very low to low levels. Regions 1421 (N18, L=133, class/area = Cro/30 on 20 February) and 1422 (N15, L=177, class/area = Dsi/330 on 21 February) each produced isolated C-class activity, the largest a C4 at 20/0509 UTC from Region 1421. The most significant event of the period was a filament eruption from the northeast quadrant early on 24 February associated with an Earth-directed coronal mass ejection (CME).

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit. An enhancement of the greater than 10 MeV proton flux at geosynchronous orbit began around 25/0300Z and continued through the remainder of the period (peak flux of 4.6 pfu at 26/0055 UTC). The enhancement was associated with the filament eruption observed on 24 February.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit increased from normal to high levels during 20 - 22 February due to effects from a coronal hole high speed stream (CH HSS). Fluxes decreased to mostly moderate levels during 23 - 26 February.

Geomagnetic field activity was at unsettled to active levels with minor to major storm periods at high latitudes due to CH HSS effects. Activity decreased to quiet to unsettled levels on 21 February as CH HSS effects subsided. Quiet to unsettled levels were observed on 22 February with active periods at high latitudes due to the onset of another CH HSS. Activity dropped to mostly quiet levels on 23 February as CH HSS effects subsided. Mostly quiet to unsettled levels occurred during the remainder of the period (24 - 26 February) with the exception of isolated active to major storm levels at high latitudes on 25 February. A Sudden Impulse (19 nT) was observed on 26 February marking the arrival of the 24 February CME.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
29 February - 26 March 2012

Solar activity is expected to be very low to low during the forecast period.

No proton events are expected at geosynchronous orbit.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at normal to moderate levels from 29 February - 17 March. Flux is expected to increase to moderate to high levels on 18 - 19 March due to effects from a recurrent CH HSS. Predominately normal to moderate levels are expected for the remainder of the period.

Geomagnetic field activity is expected to begin with quiet to unsettled levels on 29 February as effects from the 24 February CME subside. Predominately quiet levels are expected during the forecast period. However, unsettled conditions are likely on 02, 05 - 07 and 11 March due to weak CH HSS effects and unsettled to active conditions are expected on 17 - 20 March due to a more prominent recurrent negative polarity CH HSS.

Band allocations and time zone conversions for the USA. Includes broadcast bands used outside the USA. For multi-use bands, primary usage is shown.
Some stations operate outside official bands. Information is from Oct 2008
FCC rules and Sep 2009 NTIA manual, see Chapter 4 of:
http://www.ntia.doc.gov/osmhome/redbook/redbook.html

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day;
frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.

Please e-mail suggestions and corrections to billmc@agora.rdrop.com.

Phone line as SW antenna

WARNINGS AND DISCLAIMERS

Connecting unapproved devices to phone lines may be illegal in your area. Telephone lines present a potential shock hazard. Do not use this antenna for transmitting. Use at your own risk.

INTRODUCTION

This article describes how to use a phone line as a shortwave receiving antenna. Performance will vary depending on the kind of phone line you have. Overhead lines usually make okay antennas, while underground lines
| usually don't. Phone lines carrying DSL service may be unsuitable because | DSL operates over a wide spectrum. A phone line antenna will generally pick up more power line noise than a dedicated antenna, so don't expect to | use it for DX work. Nevertheless, I found that it outperformed the
| telescopic whip antennas built into many portables.

A reader sent in this suggestion: If you're concerned about connecting the phone line directly to the receiver, try wrapping the phone cord several times around the receiver's telescopic whip antenna instead. Performance may not be as good as a direct connection, but it will probably be better than the whip antenna by itself.

Someone else wrote asking about lightning protection. I haven't thought much about it because thunderstorms are rare in my area. Most phone lines have lightning arrestors on them where they enter the house, but the lightning arrestors may pass enough energy during a lightning strike damage a receiver. My suggestion is to disconnect the antenna when not in use if you experience frequent thunderstorms.

HOW TO DO IT

The simplest connection is a single capacitor between the phone line and receiver. The capacitor eliminates all phone line voltages, including | ringing, so that they will not harm the receiver. The capacitor should
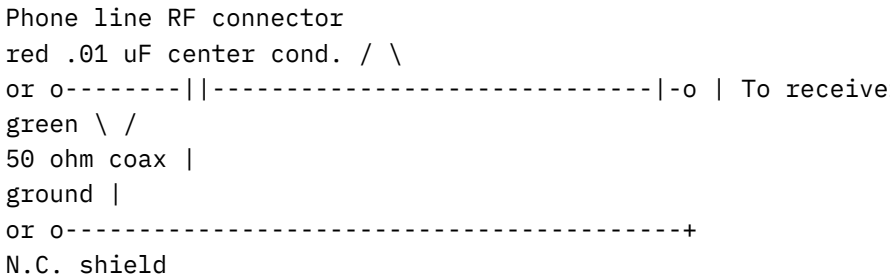
| be rated 250 volts or higher.



N.C. = no connect. I originally connected the phone line ground (yellow wire) to this terminal, but reception was better without it (if you do this, play it safe and put a .01 uF capacitor in series). If another ground is available, you can connect it to this terminal.

If you are picking up local AM or FM radio stations on the shortwave bands, it is likely that your receiver is overloaded. Inexpensive and portable receivers usually lack the filtering needed to eliminate this interference, but you can make your own filters. Filters can also be | purchased from shortwave dealers (see below for recommendations).

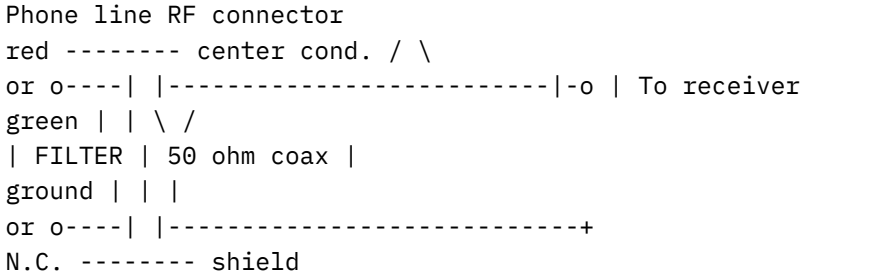
A high-pass filter can be used to remove signals below the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from local AM stations and presents a high impedance to the phone line at audio frequencies so that the phone line remains balanced.

A low-pass filter can be used to remove signals above the shortwave bands. It rejects interference from FM and TV stations, as well as VHF 2-way radio transmitters. If you use both filters, connect the output of the first filter to the input of the second (don't forget to connect their ground terminals together). It doesn't matter which filter is connected first.

These filters also work well with random wire antennas. Just connect the antenna in place of the phone line.

The filter(s) should be connected to the phone line in this manner:



| RECOMMENDED FILTERS
| If you don't want to make your own filters, the following have good | performance, are well-built and affordable:
|
| Model 400 BCB interference filter (3.5 MHz highpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#bcb
|

| Model 420 HF lowpass filter (30 MHz lowpass)
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/filtersrf.html#3
| (scroll down a bit to see the model 420)
| If you have a random-wire antenna, the following unit will provide | impedance matching and lightning protection (connect antenna to 450-ohm | terminal):
| Model 182A beverage matching unit
| http://www.iceradioproducts.com/reconly.html#Beverage Matching

FILTER PLANS

The original credit for the high-pass and low-pass filters goes to Paul Blumstein and John Shalamskas, respectively. Edited versions of their articles are included here:

Date: 09 Jan 91 00:54:08 GMT
From: paulb@harley.TTI.COM (Paul Blumstein)
Subject: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

The following ascii-schematic diagram is a high pass filter that will filter out Broadcast Band (MW) stations. I found it a great boon to my shortwave listening since local MW stations overload my ATS-803A front end & appear in SW, especially with a long antenna.

If you remember my antenna saga, I went from 50 feet to 150 feet & had overload problems causing me to cut back to 50 feet. (Even at 50 feet, I still have some MW interference). I took the advice of Gary Coffman and looked up filters in the ARRL Handbook. With the filter in place, I intend to try to increase my antenna length again.

Anywho, here is the filter, for interested parties.

--------||---+----||-----+----||-----------
} }
{ {
} }
-------------+-----------+-----------------
```

The outer capacitors are 1500 pf ceramic disks.
The inner capacitor is 820 pf ceramic disk.
The squiggly things are coils (two total). Each one is 2.7 uh.
(a close value will do).

Subject: Re: BC Band Hi-Pass Filter

I built the filter that Paul Blumstein posted recently and measured it on a gain-phase analyzer. Here are its characteristics:

100 kHz -120dB
500 kHz -68dB

1000 kHz -38dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2100 kHz -3dB

The source and load impedances were 50 ohms. Because the filter has five elements, the attenuation is 30dB per octave. The measurements confirmed this.

This filter seems to be a good compromise between interference attenuation and passband response. There is very little attenuation in the 120m band and above. It could use a little more attenuation at the upper end of MW, which could be done with more stages or a higher cutoff frequency. Alternatively, you could build two of these filters and put them in series. (Since two 1500pF capacitors in series are really 750pF, you could eliminate one cap.)

Just for fun, I put 470 ohms in series with the input to see how the filter performed with an antenna mismatch. The response was:

100 kHz -105dB
500 kHz -60dB
1000 kHz -35dB
1600 kHz -15dB
2300 kHz -3dB

These figures are normalized to the passband response of -15dB, which is due to the impedance mismatch between the source and load and would have been there without the filter. Hence, the filter works almost as well in spite of the mismatch, which is good news to those who use long-wire antennas.

Subject: Construction of filters for SW reception

Several people have asked for construction details of the filters I built for my DX-440.

The high-pass filter helped some, but in my location the VHF/UHF broadcasters are also causing problems. So, I dug out the ARRL handbook and chose a 7-element Chebyshev low-pass design that is -3 dB at 35 MHz, -20 dB at 43 MHz, and -50 dB at 64 MHz (all calculated; it works well in practice!)

chassis ground

I had to do a little more improvising at this point. I used .33 uH instead of .36, and .66 uH instead of .42, but it works fine.

The 5-lug terminal strips were perfect for these circuits, since there are 4 lugs plus a grounded lug. All "ground" connections go to the lug that is mounted to the chassis, and the other 4 lugs are used for each of the connections on the signal line. One terminal strip is used per filter. Since both filters were necessary to clean up the hash, I am going to put them both into one box when I get the time.

The proper way to connect them is in series, i.e.

There is no difference between ends. They are "bilateral" which means you can't possibly hook them up backwards. (In the above schematics, left and right ends are interchangeable.)

COIL WINDING

You can make the coils yourself using this formula:

L = 0.2 * B^2 * N^2 / (3B + 9A + 10C)

L is the inductance, in uH
A is the length of the coil, in inches
B is the mean diameter of the coil, in inches
C is the diameter of the wire, in inches
N is the number of turns

For small wire, you can assume C = 0.

Typical Liberal/Democrat/Marxist/Socialist response.

Heck, I'm really surprised that you didn't suggest taxing it.

Breitbart...what a swell guy.

He snipped and clipped, cut and pasted and twisted Ms. Sherrod's speech to say she was calling a white farmer a racist.

If you look at the entire speech ("un-edited") by Breitbart, it has been CONCLUSIVELY PROVEN that she meant no such thing. Her words were twisted and taken out of context.

A few days before he died, someone asked Breitbart on his blog why he didn't apologize to Sherrod.

Breitbart's response was "Apologize for WHAT"?

For what? Maybe apologize for ruining someone's career based on your falsehoods, lying and deceit.

Karma that he died???

What about REPUBLICAN taxation, hmmm?

You seem to have conveniently forgotten that your Michigan Republican governor has raised taxes on pensioners, wants to raise automobile registration from ~ $100 to about $150 and wants to significantly raise the gasoline tax. I don't remember you complaining about that.

Oh, sorry, I forgot. You only seem to complain when the Dems tax.

Whatta hypocrite.

Like WHO did WHAT to Palin?

It seems like most of the 'damage' done to Palin, she did to herself.

She came across as very unintelligent, not very well read, unable to give a respectable answer to even soft ball questions during various TV interviews.

SHE quit being governor of her own volition -- and came up with a weak, non-believable excuse for doing so.

So far, only 3 books have been written about Palin, all 3 very negative [I've read two of the three] -- and one was written by her de facto chief of staff, who early on, was a rabid Palin supporter. Read it for yourself and find out what a despicable, duplicitous person he now knows her to be.

Palin's [should be] motto: "Quitters never win and winners never quit".

Thanks for your concern, Drifter. It was an anxiety-filled afternoon with rotating super-cells passing all around Louisville. We had to spend about 45 minutes hunkered down in our tornado room with tornado sirens blasting. Fortunately, we were lucky. The worst tornados were about 15 miles north of us. All I lost was a few longwire antennas. Can't say as much for many of my students and fellow instructors that live across the Ohio River, in Indiana. The damage across the river is hard to fathom.

Hope you're having fun!

Liberty Net: February 25, 2012

http://3950.net/2012/03/liberty-net-february-25-2012/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THE LIBERTY NET continues to be much like a modern-day School of Athens, bringing together branches of philosophy and thought ï¿½ and news about important events ï¿½ together in a way that no other meeting of the minds can match.

Here are some of the subjects that participants discussed during this weekï¿½s Liberty Net session:

ï¿½ Why do you suppose that the network television program Law and Order, which prides itself on stories ï¿½ripped from the headlines,ï¿½ routinely takes accounts of horrific crimes committed by Mestizos and Blacks against Whites, and fictionalizes them by reversing the races of the perpetrators and victims? Could it have anything to do with the ethnic makeup of TV network executives? (13 minutes)

ï¿½ Until parents complained, one public elementary school actually required its students to recite an almost illiterate ï¿½poemï¿½ praising both Obama and basketball as if they were somehow sacred. (49 minutes)

ï¿½ Why is former ï¿½Homeland Securityï¿½ czar Michael Chertoff ï¿½ the same man who released the ï¿½Israeli Art Studentï¿½ spy ring, even when it was known they had connections to the 9/11 attacks ï¿½ allowed to make multiple millions by contracting and ï¿½consultingï¿½ for the very police state programs he created? (1 hour 35 minutes)

ï¿½ Gas prices are rising faster than those of precious metals ï¿½ and gas thefts are rising too, with criminals using high-speed puncturing tools and electrical pumps to steal many hundreds of gallons every day. (1 hour 42 minutes)

ï¿½ As the oligarchs ramp up their warmongering hysteria against Syria and Iran, and possibly even Russia, expect to hear plenty of outrageously false atrocity stories, similar to the ones that were used to lie us into World War 2 and the Iraq war. The latest crazy tale is that Syrian soldiers have been ordered to bayonet babies and shoot small children ï¿½ but expect many, many more. (1 hour 44 minutes)

ï¿½ Recently the FBI issued a press release praising themselves for ï¿½stopping a terror plot on Washington, DCï¿½ that FBI agents themselves had planned and created ï¿½ using some hapless, emotional, and gullible Muslims as patsies. When is this outrageous criminal behavior from the so-called ï¿½Justice Departmentï¿½ going to be stopped and punished? (1 hour 48 minutes)

ï¿½ Part of the current war hysteria comes from insane religious fanatics ï¿½ some of whom are funding Rick Santorum, by the way ï¿½ who believe that it would be a good idea to start a nuclear war in the Middle East, which they imagine will ï¿½fulfill prophecyï¿½ and usher in the ï¿½direct rule of God on Earthï¿½ as a result. (1 hour 54 minutes)

ï¿½ The Law and Order television series and its spinoffs have not only skewed the races of attackers and victims, but have also slowly and cleverly changed the racial composition of their casts in an apparent effort to demoralize, and inculcate self-hatred in, White people. (2 hours 8 minutes)

ï¿½ One of the most insidious ways to commit genocide is to encourage racial mixing among the people you wish to exterminate, and there is abundant evidence to suggest that this is being done to us. (2 hours 12 minutes)

Remember that you can find the Liberty Net in the upper part of 75 meters (lately it has been consistently higher than 3950 kHz) every Saturday night at 10PM Eastern Time ï¿½ join in, or listen live on the Internet via N2SAG or N2IRJ ï¿½ or listen at your leisure via the mp3 files posted here at http://3950.net every week. Usually the new recording is posted early on Sunday. It will be visible at the top of the upper right column of every page of this site.

Once again, thanks to W1WCR for running this important and historic discussion net, and thanks also to N2IRJ for making these recordings available.

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
27 February - 04 March 2012

Solar activity ranged from very low to moderate levels. Activity was at very low to low levels during 27 February - 01 March with occasional B-class and isolated C-class flares. Activity increased to moderate levels on 02 March due to an M3/Sf flare at 02/1746 UTC from Region 1429 (N18, L=300, class/area Dkc/700 on 04 March).
Activity decreased to low levels on 03 March with occasional low-level C-class flares from Region 1429. Activity returned to moderate levels on 04 March due to a long duration M2/1n flare at 04/1052 UTC from Region 1429. Region 1429 rotated into view on 03
March and quickly became recognized as a large, magnetically complex spot group with a reverse-polarity, beta-gamma-delta magnetic configuration.

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit, however, the greater than 10 MeV proton flux was enhanced due to the long duration M2 flare observed on 04 March.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at normal to moderate levels during 27 February - 01 March. Flux levels increased to normal to high levels during 02 - 04 March.

Geomagnetic field activity was at quiet to minor storm levels during 27 - 28 February due to a CME passage associated with the filament eruption/asymmetric halo-CME observed on 24 February. Activity decreased to quiet levels on 29 February. Quiet to unsettled levels occurred during 01 - 04 March with active to minor storm periods observed at high latitudes due to weakly-enhanced solar wind speeds combined with sustained periods of weak southward IMF (Negative Bz).

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
07 March - 02 April 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at moderate to high levels from 07 - 16 March. Activity is expected to decrease to low levels during 17 - 28 March after Region 1429 rotates around the west limb. Probabilities for moderate to high activity will increase once again on 29 March with the return of Region 1429.

There is a chance for isolated proton events at geosynchronous orbit while Region 1429 remains on the disk through 16 March.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at normal to moderate levels from 07 - 17 March. Flux is expected to increase to moderate to high levels on 18 - 19 March due to effects from a recurrent coronal hole high speed stream (CH HSS). Normal to moderate levels are expected to return from 20 - 28 March followed by moderate to high levels on 30 March - 01 April due to a second recurrent CH HSS. Normal to moderate levels are expected for the remainder of the period.

Geomagnetic field activity is expected to be active with a chance for minor storm levels on 07 March due to the combined arrival of CMEs observed on 04 and 05 March. Activity is expected to be at quiet to unsettled levels on 08 March as the effects from those CMEs subside. Mostly quiet conditions are expected during 09 - 10 March. Quiet to unsettled levels are expected on 11 - 13 March due to weak CH HSS effects. Activity is expected to decrease to quiet levels during 14 - 16 March. Activity is expected to increase to unsettled to active levels during 17 - 20 March due to a recurrent negative polarity CH HSS. Mostly quiet conditions are expected from 21 - 27 March followed by an increase to quiet to unsettled levels on 28 - 31 March due to another recurrent CH HSS. Predominantly quiet conditions are expected for the remainder of the period.

Attention Beginning Monday March 12, 2012, the Weekly Bulletin will now be issued and available on the SWPC web page every Monday morning by 1500 UTC.

I answered an ad played over the radio that I have been hearing for several days now that the first one thousand callers who call in today will get free of charge a program and advice on how to control your child.

The number to call is 800-749-7870

So, I called the number. Turns out that this is not free at all. An up front payment is required of $119.00. You can get that money back if you complete the program. Who knows how long that will take.

The person who answered my call gave his name as Patrick number 4104. I repeatedly demanded that he send me this free program that the radio ad says that I am supposed to get. Each time he said that I have to pay an advance deposit.

I am writing the FCC today demanding that this fraudulent ad be taken off the air and that these people be fined and hopefully jailed.

Here is the online ad for the same program.

“I’m a behavioral therapist and a mom…and I can help you fix your child’s behavior.”

“I know what it’s like when the child that you love becomes a defiant, out-of-control child who disrespects you.

That’s why my husband James and I created The Total Transformation, the program that tens of thousands of families are now using to turn around their child’s behavior.

If you’ve heard about The Total Transformation, and wondered if it would work for you, now’s your chance to try it for free.”

—Janet Lehman, MSW
Child Behavior Therapist
Co-creator of The Total Transformation Program

http://www.thetotaltransformation.com/

As you will see, it says that the program is free.

The only catch is that the program is free as long as you pay $119.00

Well, not much of an SDR. If you read the fine print, they went the same route as Apple did in the original iPad and used an ARM processor with heavy video acceleration.

In the case of the iPad it meant that it could only play a h.264 encoded video files and they had to be one of a very limited choice of bit rates and resolutions. Apple corrected this in the iPad2 by adding a second core to the CPU.

This makes the rapsberry pi a great little device for video display, but for general computing they claim it is about the speed of a 300mHz Pentium II. ARM processors are not known for their high speed math, so you probably can do some interesting DSP functions on audio streams, but don't expect much for IF or RF streams.

In terms of comparison, it's roughly 1/12 the processing speed of the cheapest I3 chip. I'm sure there are a lot of radio related applications for it, but I doubt that an SDR is one of them.

Ironicaly, with the right USB receiver/modem it would make a great DTV or DBS receiver as long as the video streams you were interested in were H.264 encoded.

R6000 Multiband Vertical
The R6000 is a 6 through 20 meter, no ground radial antenna. It includes many of the features of the R8, R7 and R5 antennas. R6000 means excellent performance, easy installation and use, slim silhouette and high reliability. There are no traps used on 6, 10 and 15 meters for maximum efficiency and power handling. The R6000 employs quarter wavelength stubs on 10 and 15 meters to replace standard trap coils. The result is lower loss and wider bandwidth. The R6000 covers all bands 6 through 15 meters at a VSWR under 2:1. On 20 meters you can select the top 300 KHz or bottom 300 KHz of the band. The R6000 weighs only 12-1/2 pounds (5.6 kg). It is lightweight and easy to mount for portable or permanent installations. Machined aluminum clamps and UV stable insulators guarantee years of reliable service. The R6000 comes with the standard Cushcraft warranty of one year from purchase - plus the industry's leading technical support team stands behind each Cushcraft antenna. The R6000 makes an excellent diversity antenna to complement even the most complete stations, or pack up the R6000 for a trip to the DX location of your dreams.

772. Belfort Instrument Company PHUCKING DigiWx AWOS

Belfort Instrument Company is selling to a known terrorist country as evidenced by mention of the DigiWx AWOS on their corporate homepage sold to:

Pakistan
-Lahore International Airport (LHE/OPLA) RVR System, Lahore Pakistan

And then there is word of this:
During the first two weeks of January 2007, U.S. air strikes targeted four sites in southern Somalia formerly under al Qaida control where terrorists have been training and hiding for months.

"As we speak now, the area is being bombarded by the American air force," a Somali government official told Reuters two weeks ago.

The U.S. attacks targeted an area close to Ras Kamboni, a coastal village near the Kenyan border where many Islamists are believed to be hiding after being ousted by Ethiopia-backed government forces, the official added.

Four places were hit -- Hayo, Garer, Bankajirow and Badmadowe, the source said. "Bankajirow was the last Islamist holdout. Bankajirow and Badmadowe were hit hardest," he added.

The Pentagon confirmed only one air strike that took place in the south of the country, saying that it was part of a wider offensive aimed at an al-Qaeda cell that includes suspects in the 1998 bombings of U.S. embassies in east Africa and a hotel in Kenya.

Meanwhile, ABC News quoted U.S. and French military sources as saying that American U.S. special forces were working with Ethiopian troops on the ground in operations inside Somalia.

Following a thrust by the U.S. military, U.S. special forces discovered a Belfort Instruments Digiwx AWOS weather reporting system on a hill south of Ras Kamboni.

The Belfort Instruments Digiwx AWOS station was not operational as it had suffered a direct military hit from an explosion of unknown origin. But the Digiwx name could be clearly seen imprinted on the 15 foot tower which now lays on it side in pieces.

U.S. troops subsequently uncovered handheld Digiwx weather receivers in two of the camps previoulsy occupied by al-Qaeda terrorists which apparently had been left behind and abandoned.

How the Belfort Instruments Digiwx AWOS system made it to Somalia and into terrorists hands is still unknown. Whether al-Qaeda and Osama bin-Laden organizations are employing Digiwx AWOS units in other parts of the world is currently unknown.

U.S. troops have been advised to be on the lookout for additional Digiwx AWOS units under Al-Qaeda and/or Sunni/Shiite control in Iraq and Afghanistan.

U.S. special forces are reportedly monitoring the two known wireless frequencies that Digiwx AWOS transmits on, notably 464.6 and 464.75 MHz. British military sources report that signals on both frequencies have been detected but only occasionally as the terrorists seem to be running Belfort Instruments Digiwx for only short periods of time.

Belfort Instrument Company (Baltimore, MD, USA), the original manufacturer of Digiwx AWOS, has had no comment.

Why would an American company be "aiding and abetting" known terrorists organizations around the world while doing business in pursuit of the almighty American dollar? Maybe you would want to contact them and find out why:

Much has been written about Belfort Instrument Company's DigiWx AWOS anonymously for good reason because the Belfort DigiWx "fur" has been flying since at least 2005. One can find mention of Belfort's inferior weather station named

DigiWx AWOS as witnessed by:

Ten reasons to NOT buy Belfort DigiWx AWOS (keep reading)

I also am of the belief that Belfort Instrument Company has been actively censoring anyone and any words which dishes dirt on this inferior DigiWx AWOS weather station.

Now we have word from Belfort Instrument Company of a "Recommended Service Bulletin" dated April 21, 2011 and numbered 2011-1.

SUBJECT: Unicom Transmission

MODELS AFFECTED: Belfort DigiWx AV100 with either Technisonic or ICom radios

TIME OF COMPLIANCE: At owners discretion

There have been some discussions by users at congested airports of not being able to receive the AWOS broadcast over the Unicom or the weather report stepping on other Unicom communications. The following suggest may decrease the problem.

1. On the DigiWx radio, set the squelch well above the squelch break point this, in turn requires more power to break the squelch which means traffic has to be closer to the airport to receive the weather report.

2. The DigiWx standard broadcast mode is using 3 MIC clicks. At busy airports, there isn t a way for the DigiWx to determine if someone is clicking the MIC 3 times for the weather or three (3) separate pilots are clicking the MIC to talk. If this is the case, it might help to change the number of MIC clicks for weather to 5 MIC clicks. Both of the above recommendations will help reduce the number of broadcasts from the DigiWx and they are easy to do and don t cost money.

Well, I fly from one of the airports in MT with one of these DigiWx AWOS pieces of SHIT. And its beyond me to understand why changing the mic clicks at a congested airport is going to fix the problem of a DigiWx which clogs the UNICOM frequency. Just like Belfort said, DigiWx cannot distinguish who is clicking the mic 3 times. The DigiWx is stupid. When it hears any 3 mic clicks, it activates and clogs an already congested UNICOM frequency. We pointed this out to Belfort 3 years ago and THIS WAS AND CONTINUES TO BE THEIR FIX?

If I cut thru the emotion of everything ever written about the Belfort Instrument Company DigiWx AWOS, I am now a believer. Belfort doesn't know the first phucking thing about designing an AWOS to broadcast over a UNICOM frequency. I have talked with numerous pilots from other airports who have the SuperAWOS and the Vaisala AWOS. And they just DON'T have these clogged frequency problems.

Yep, you read that right:

Have you heard about the Meadow Lake Airport AWOS Fiasco?
Quoting, http://meadowlake-airport.com/AWOS.htm reads in short:

"Executive Conclusion: Of the four candidate AWOS manufacturers, only two meet the threshold and objective system performance levels. These are systems provided by All Weather Inc (AWI) and Vaisala. The SuperAWOS by Potomac Aviation does not pass an initial cut due to maintenance problems encountered with their SuperUnicom installed at Meadow Lake airport."

"The Belfort DigiWX "AWOS" is not a true FAA fully commission-able AWOS. Its complete sensor suite is not certified. Installation of this system at 00V means that we would not have our weather data (METAR) accessible in the federal database which means that Flight Service and other sites such as ADDS, XM weather, WSI, etc would not not have Meadow Lake weather data. The only certified weather info would be altimeter and visibility. While this does allow Part 91 and 135 instrument approaches, the inability to incorporate its complete METAR data in the federal system is a deal-breaker."

"The apparent initial cost savings of the initial Belfort DigiWX acquisition is minimal and not worth the lack of functionality and usefulness to the national aviation community. Life-cycle cost of the Belfort system over 15 years is over $27,000 higher than the Vaisala system."

"It would not allow us to transition to a three letter airport identifier."

"Bottom line is that the Belfort system represents false economy, minimal pilot usefulness and is inconsistent with providing the aviation community services that make this airport attractive to current and future pilots and businesses."

"Of the remaining systems offered by AWI and Vaisala, Vaisala is the preferred system."

The complete report highlighting DigiWx shortcomings can be found at:

Now have a LQQK at this.....

Ron Lee from Meadow Lake Airport wrote in Pike's Peak Flyer:
January 2009

The SuperUnicom was shut down in early August 2008 due to harmful interference on the 122.7 MHz frequency A grant was submitted and approved to get an AWOS III P/T using FAA funds.
Our portion of the cost is around $4,000 although incidentals may drive it higher... but far below the $25,000 previously budgeted for an AWOS. One MLAA Board member is attempting to force a system that is not fully certified down our throats using the flawed rationale that it is cheaper that the fully certified systems offered by All Weather Inc and Vaisala. A major down side to the Belfort system is that pilots will not be able to access METAR data through Flight Service, ADDS, on their on-board weather systems, etc. We will very likely be unable to acquire a three letter airport ID and maintenance will cost much more over its lifetime than with either of the fully certified systems. Plus in its current implementation, there is no obvious upgrade path to getting present weather and lightning information available in an AWOS III P/T system.
It is crucial to the safety of this airport and our usefulness as a destination airport within the National Airspace System that we get a state of the art AWOS. With the FAA grant, it is amazingly affordable. But it is essential that local pilots become informed on this matter and contact all Board members to express their view. My opinion... based upon extensive research on behalf of MLAA members... is that we need a fully certified AWOS. The minimum configuration is AWOS III, with AWOS III P/T highly desirable (objective). It needs to be the number one priority acquisition with a target installation not later than Spring 2009. It must not be sacrificed to pay interest on the land acquisition.

Following up on the post regarding the UN-APPROVED, UN-CERTIFIED and UN-OFFICIAL weather data spewed by Belfort
Digiwx AWOS, one also needs to note that they only sold 2

Bruce R. Robinson's 10 reasons to NOT buy Belfort Digiwx AWOS:

Ten reasons for not buying Belfort Instrument Digiwx AWOS:
1) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified wind speed
2) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified wind direction
3) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified temperature
4) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified dewpoint
5) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified density altitude

6) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified visibility
7) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified precipitation measurement
8) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified precipitation discriminator
9) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified ceiling measurement (ceilometer)
10) no FAA Approved or FAA Certified lightning detection

About Belfort Instrument Company:
Belfort used to be a leading provider of weather instruments to the government, professional meteorology and aviation markets. Key words: "use to be." They never provided any wind sensors to the Wright Brothers despite their fantastic assertion that they did! Historical archives available at the U.S. Air Force National Museum (1100 Spaatz Street, Wright-Patterson AFB, OH 45433) tells a very different story and specifically mentions a "Richards" anemometer which Wilbur Wright held as pictured at: "http://wings.avkids.com/Book/Wright/history1_19012.html". The Belfort aerovane wind system on U.S. Naval aircraft carriers are currently being replaced with ultrasonic wind sensors from QPI (11207 Single Oak Road, Fredericksburg, VA 22407) which just won a $94 million dollar contract for the Moriah Wind System. Belfort wind speed and direction anemometers found on the ASOS platform are now being replaced with ultrasonic sensors from the Vaisala Group. Belfort Instruments Model 6000 visibility sensor will no longer be a part of the U.S. Air Force's OS-21/FSB program come early 2007. And despite a $500,000 U.S. government grant from NASA's Small Aircraft Transportation System (SATS) program in 2004 to build a low-cost ceilometer, Belfort didn't possess the technical smarts nor the engineering know-how to accomplish the task. So now they're importing the Eliasson CBME 80A laser ceilometer from Muir Matheson. As one can readily see, Belfort is no longer setting any standards of measurement in the weather instrumentation world. And now Belfort is propagating lie after lie about their fabled company history while trying to steal thunder from the accomplishments of the Wright Brothers. According to the National Museum of American History (12th Street and Constitution Avenue, N.W., Washington, D.C. 20560), Belfort founder Julian Friez never made it to Baltimore to set up shop until sometime in the 1890s even though Belfort officials fraudulently claim the company was founded in 1876. Thus, there was no 125th anniversary for Belfort to celebrate in 2001 even though they hosted a party to which no one came! Belfort's proclamation that it is the "Oldest Weather Company in the World" is simply yet another Belfort lie as Thomas Romney Robinson invented the first wind anemometer in 1846, six years before Julian Friez was born in 1852. Belfort doesn't even know it's own company history so they just make it up! You should wonder what other crap

(eg. Digiwx AWOS) they also make up! For more information

Dave is using Linux for his digital radio stuff. He will be a likely candidate for the Pi. I've been looking into it as a replacement or co-worker with an Arduino setup.

The Pi is an amazing piece of work, with an extremely affordable price.

You can buy ten of them for what a weekend drunk costs in Holland Mi.

The K7RA Solar Update

03/09/2012
This has been quite a week for dramatic solar activity. The average daily sunspot number was up nearly 26 points to 69.4, while the average daily solar flux rose nearly 17 points to 121.9 for the period March 1-7. Sunspot numbers for March 1-7 were 24, 24, 52, 70, 105, 109 and 102, with a mean of 69.4. The 10.7 cm flux was 103.4, 108.2, 116.4, 120.1, 131.6, 138.1 and 135.7, with a mean of 121.9. The estimated planetary A indices were 14, 10, 8, 12, 8, 8 and 44, with a mean of 14.9. The estimated mid-latitude A indices were 12, 10, 8, 10, 11, 10 and 33, with a mean of 13.4.

The latest forecast has solar flux at 140 on March 9, 135 on March 10-13, 130 on March 14, 125 on March 15-17, then 120, 115, 115, 110, 110 on March 18-22, then back down to 105 on March 23-25. The predicted planetary A index for March 9-13 is 27, 12, 10, 10 and 12, then 5 on March 14-16, then 12, 15, 10, and 8 on March 17-20, and 5 on March 21-27.

A series of coronal mass ejections emerged from a very large sunspot group (1429), and a large one produced a shockwave that hit the ACE spacecraft at 1045 UTC Thursday. I had been out earlier looking for aurora as well as a dark place to watch it, as the shock was expected to hit at 0630 UTC, but that was plus or minus seven hours caveat on the forecast. By the time it hit, I was back at home. I was using real time geomagnetic data to look for a rise in activity, which can be accessed by hitting the Submit Query button here. For some reason, the shockwave was more noticeable at mid-latitude magnetometers than those at the far north.

Early today (Friday morning), another CME hit Earth, and geomagnetic activity is still high, with the planetary K index reaching 7. This is a good place to see changes in geomagnetic conditions recorded every three hours.

On Thursday, NPR featured an excellent interview with Joe Kunches of NOAA’s Space Weather Prediction Center in Boulder. Listen as he gives a clear explanation of what a CME is, and talks about effects to Earth and satellites above. Note also that the Boulder facility is also on Facebook.

Find more on solar activity here.

Among all of this activity, I’ve not heard anything from VHF operators about auroral communications. But we did get this interesting note from Jim Parkinson, W9JEF, of Tontitown, Arkansas: “I operate low band (160, 80 and 40 meters), tying the feeders of my 80 meter turnstile together as a flat top with a vertical run of 48 feet. I run 400-500 W. On March 7 at 0748, I heard K8QKY on 40 meters CW, with considerable flutter on his 599 signal with some fading signals, and sometimes a sort of echo, which may have indicated simultaneous long path propagation. I gave him a call, and Steve gave me a 599 (from Ann Arbor, Michigan); he reported a similar sound on my sig. Then at 0801, NN6T in Kingman, Arizona gave me a call, and I observed the same effect on Glen's signal, but he said mine sounded 'FB' (presumably he had his 2 el beam headed in my direction, so maybe aurora instead of long path) -- 599 in both ways, again with fading signals. At 0837, I heard ZL1BVB, but not as strong as the two times I worked him (days earlier)."

Note that around the time Jim worked NN6T and K8QKY, the planetary K index was 6, and the planetary A index for that day was 44.

We also heard from Angel Santana Diaz, WP3GW, of Trujillo Alto, Puerto Rico: "It's 1000 UTC today March 8, and I only hear noise, a loud 'SSSHHHHHHhhhhhhh' on the lower bands. I can't hear anything on 40 meters, no CW, not even the shortwave AM stations. Now at 1015 UTC, I can barely hear some local Caribbean stations on 7.188 MHz. About this past weekend's contest, all I can say is, wow! Ten meters was the band to be on, the easiest one where you could park and call all day long. I had 400 QSOs there, breaking last year's record. Later, I was on 80 meters, and the best time to operate was after 0700 when I did 70 contacts in an hour. In all, I made 103 QSOs, something I've never done in a contest. And even though I had only 27 QSOs on 20 meters during the weekend, in less than an hour, I had a chance on 14.189 and did 102 QSOs and as the stations were coming; I've never dealt with a pile-up in that way. I felt like a pro attending everybody fast!"

Later Angel reported that conditions were improving fast.

All times listed are UTC, unless otherwise noted.

Amateur solar observer Tad Cook, K7RA, of Seattle, Washington, provides this weekly report on solar conditions and propagation. This report also is available via W1AW every Friday, and an abbreviated version appears each Thursday in The ARRL Letter.

A very limited test run was made, and they auctioned those off, so presumably those are out there.

One source says the first large run was towards the end of February (I forget the specific date) so perhaps they are available already in the UK.

The key point seems to be the price. You can look in five year old issues of "Linux Journal" and see small boards for use with Linux. Maybe not as small as this, but for a lot of things, extreme size isn't needed. But they were more expensive.

This station carries the Enigma 2000 numbers station identifier of M08a out of Cuba. The 0600 UTC, 5800 kHz transmission is a secondary, or repeat time slot. It should be active on Monday, Tuesday, Thursday, Friday, and Saturday mornings (UTC). These will all most likely be repeats of the 0500 UTC, 5898 kHz, transmissions the same days.

Further details, including a recent prediction chart of transmission times, days, and frequencies, can be found at both http://www.brogers.dsl.pipex.com/enigma2000/ and http://home.luna.nl/~ary/ . Both sites have separate newsletters, look for the current newsletter on each site (http://www.numbersoddities.nl/newsletters.html and http://www.brogers.dsl.pipex.com/enigma2000/newsletters/CEN.pdf).

Both sites also contain descriptions and recordings of various numbers station transmissions. Specifically look for the "Enigma Control List", I think Number 25 is the most current.

Liberty Net: March 3, 2012

http://3950.net/2012/03/liberty-net-march-3-2012/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

N2IRJï¿½s phone patch was temporarily down this week because of technical issues with Martyï¿½s transceiver ï¿½ we hope that these problems will soon be resolved ï¿½ yet participation and exchange of ideas continued on the Liberty Net at a very high level nonetheless. This week also saw some major solar activity, so the next net might feature some interesting 75 meter propagation.

Here are just a few of the ideas discussed and debated during this weekï¿½s session:

ï¿½ Russia is positioning itself to prevent the plans of the warmongering oligarchs to start wars in Syria and Iran from coming to fruition. Most recently, Moscow has been helping both countries improve their abilities to detect and defend against attacks. (10 minutes)

ï¿½ If the regime in Washington were really serious about preventing terror attacks by Muslims, it would end, and then reverse, all Middle Eastern immigration ï¿½ and would also stop murdering innocent Muslims overseas in its wars for Israel. (13 minutes)

ï¿½ In Detroit, civilization has fallen and people are desperate. Itï¿½s doubtful that the new law requiring armed security guards at every gas station, or the ï¿½Midnight March Against Violence and Fear,ï¿½ can solve what is essentially a genetic, biological problem. (28 minutes)

ï¿½ A new bill, HR347, has passed the regimeï¿½s pretended ï¿½House of Representatives.ï¿½ This bill makes it illegal to protest if there is any politician in the vicinity ï¿½ even if you donï¿½t know heï¿½s there. (44 minutes)

ï¿½ Andrew Breitbart, immediately before his mysterious death, had telegraphed the fact that he had some very damaging information about the even more mysterious Barack Hussein Obama and the shadowy forces that created his persona and career. (1 hour 4 minutes)

ï¿½ The Solutrean Hypothesis ï¿½ the idea that the first humans in America were from Europe and arrived 20,000 years before the Amerindians ï¿½ is rapidly gaining ground, because more and more physical evidence of a very early European presence here is being discovered. (1 hour 11 minutes)

ï¿½ If the Middle Eastern crime lords who really run the United States cannot bribe a politician, they will intimidate him with dirt from their extensive files. If there is no dirt on him, a physically attractive operative of the appropriate sex will be dispatched to obtain some. And, if that does not work, their intelligence agencies will simply do what they always do, and the newspapers will duly report a sad passing due to a plane crash, an auto accident, or ï¿½natural causes.ï¿½ (1 hour 44 minutes)

ï¿½ In the Netherlands, a government-funded mobile ï¿½euthanasia vanï¿½ is now available for those who supposedly want to end their lives, but whose doctors refuse to help kill them. Why is it that Third Worlders who live very primitive lives tenaciously hold on to every precious breath, while well-off Westerners increasingly accept a culture of death? (2 hours 3 minutes)

ï¿½ Why are the major media in this country burying the fact that Bradley Manning ï¿½ the courageous soldier who exposed the dirty lies and secrets of the Washington regimeï¿½s military ï¿½ has now been nominated for the Nobel Peace Prize? (2 hours 16 minutes)

Youï¿½re able to listen to Liberty Net recordings right now on your computer here at http://3950.net/ ï¿½ feel free to download the files and listen to them on your portable mp3 player. And you can also listen live during net times (10PM onward every Saturday night) via WB4AIO or N2IRJï¿½s receiver at http://3950.net/live or via N2SAGï¿½s receiver on Stickam.

And donï¿½t forget to join in the discussion yourself by checking in to the most exciting net on the amateur bands every Saturday night!

Our thanks go to W1WCR for his hard work and courage in keeping this important part of the amateur radio service alive since 1974.

The only thing that blocks ELF is high voltage 60 cycle AC power. You need to climb one of those big-ass towers above the Hoover Dam and stay there 'til the danger passes. If you can't get to Vegas, go the mall and sit on the transformers out back.

I'm astounded that, after nearly a decade, you still put the "veried" slam on your sig. It shows you for the person you obviously are.

The bulletin of the National Radio Club, DX News, is available online, going back to the 40's. This, the premiere AM DX club in North America, has had a "Verie Signer" column for about 7 decades. The "Musings of the Members" section is full of references to "veries" with vastly fewer references to "QSLs" (and said references are nearly always to cards, not letters, with letters being the standard for AM verifications of reception).

RaDex, the premiere DX and listener magazine in the 20's, 30's and first few years of the 40's has frequent mentions of "veries:" About 110 Radex issues are available at www.americanradiohistory.com in the Radex section.

"Verie" is the standard nomenclature for AM / Medium wave verifications of reception in North America.

As usual, you prefer the ad hominems to recognizing a 60-year-old fact: AM/MW verifications of reception are called "veries" and the term "QSL" was used far, far, far, less historically.

The birthers? THey have been very active lately. Joe Arpaio, loon

You have a hard time addressing any subject that puts you under scrutiny. MW verifications in North America have been "veries" for 7 decades... and you still deny it.

Heck, RaDex magazine even had a column by "Count de Veries" about, natch, verifications.

They have one giant non-directional antenna. If they put up a second shorter tower they could go directional at night and maybe go to 250 Watts!

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
05 - 11 March 2012

Solar activity ranged from low to high levels during the period.
Activity was at high levels during 05 - 07 and 09 - 10 March due mostly to a series of long-duration major flares from Region 1429 (N18, L=301, class/area Dkc/1270 on 07 March) which included an X1/2b at 05/0409Z, an X5/3b at 07/0024Z, an M6 at 09/0353Z, and an M8 at 10/1744Z. All four flares were associated with Earth-directed CMEs. Region 1429 was large and magnetically complex during the period, exhibiting a beta-gamma-delta configuration with multiple deltas. It appeared to slowly decay during 09 - 10 March, but retained much of its magnetic complexity. Region 1430 (N20, L=315, class/area Dai/200 on 07 March) produced an X1/Sf at 07/0114Z during a period of rapid development. Region 1430 appeared to be in a gradual decay phase during 08 - 10 March.

The period began with a greater than 10 MeV proton enhancement in progress. This increase from normal backgrounds was associated with a long-duration M2/1n flare that occurred prior to the period and sourced from Region 1429. The flux enhancement continued until the onset of greater than 100 MeV and greater than 10 MeV events early on 07 March associated with the X5/3b flare at 07/0024Z. The greater than 100 MeV event began at 07/0405Z, reached a maximum of 69 pfu at 07/1525Z, and ended at 10/1650Z. Also, a greater than 10 MeV event began at 07/0510Z, reached a maximum of 6530 pfu at 08/1115Z, and was in progress at the close of the period.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at normal to high levels during 05 - 06 March. Flux readings were unreliable during 07 - 09 March due to proton contamination. Fluxes were at moderate to high levels on 10 and 11 March.

Geomagnetic field activity was at quiet to severe storm levels during the period. Quiet to unsettled levels occurred during 05 - 06
March with brief minor storm periods observed at high latitudes.

Activity increased to unsettled to major storm levels on 07 March following a geomagnetic sudden impulse (SI) at 07/0427Z. The SI measured 20 nT at the Boulder magnetometer. This enhanced activity was due to a CME arrival associated with the X1/2b flare on 05 March. Quiet to minor storm levels occurred on 08 March, with major storm periods at high latitudes, as another CME, associated with the X5/3b on 07 March, impacted the geomagnetic field with an SI, as measured by the Boulder magnetometer of 59 nT, at 08/1105Z. Activity increased to quiet to severe storm levels on 09 March due to sustained southward IMF Bz combined with increased IMF Bt as CME effects persisted. Activity decreased to quiet to minor storm levels with major storm periods at high latitudes on 10 March as CME effects gradually subsided. A return to quiet levels was observed on 11 March.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
14 March - 09 April 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at low levels during 14 - 16 March with a chance for M-class activity from Region 1429. Activity is expected to decrease to predominantly background levels during 17 - 27 March, following the departure of Region 1429 on 15 March. An increase to low levels with a slight chance for M-class activity is expected from 28 March through the end of forecast period, as Region 1430 returns on 28 March and Region 1429 returns on 29 March.

A chance exists for another proton event from 14 - 16 March, as Region 1429, rotates off the visible disk. No events are expected until Region 1429 returns on 29 March, when a slight chance for another event from this proton producing region exists through the end of the forecast period.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit is expected to be at moderate to high levels during 14 - 19 March and 29 March - 03 April. Normal to moderate flux levels are expected during 20-28 March and 04 - 07 April.

Geomagnetic field activity is expected to be at predominantly quiet levels from 14 - 16 March. Activity is expected to increase to quiet to active levels during 17 - 18 March due to recurrent coronal hole high-speed stream effects. Activity is expected to decrease to mostly quiet levels during 19 - 27 March. Quiet to unsettled levels are expected during 28 - 31 March as another coronal hole high speed stream becomes geoeffective. A return to quiet levels is expected from 01- 02 April. Another increase to quiet to unsettled levels is expected on 03 - 04 April as a coronal hole high speed stream becomes geoeffective. A return to predominantly quiet levels is expected to prevail for the remainder of the period.

"Eduardo" was away all this time and yet he never got "it" out of his system. That is brutally sad. I don't care how big of an asshole he is, he deserves broader horizons, bigger thoughts and a better life than that.

- You're really messed up, Roy.

Alas mike,,, Mike... MWB!!! : I am simply 'Connecting-the-Dots' from Cuhulin to Evie

MWB may be if you had taken the time to read the Yahoo [AP] story about "Evie" you would have been touched and felt some compassion for the life that Evie is forced to live; as I was as a naturally Compassionate {Christian} Conservative.
-the-'messed-up'-is-clearly-all-yours-mwb-

? Why hasn't Prez Obama granted a Visa for Evie to come to the USA and be safe from the fear of oppression . . . -one-wonders...-

lets us pray for the safety and wellbeing of evie as we pray for for the safety and wellbeing of cuchulin

When the HF turns to noise - the UHF and some of the VHF might be enhanced, depending on the angle it hits the earth and how far south the northern lights goes.

When the HF is good, the UHF and VHF tropo suffers.

I just noticed that Michigan's Unibummer still had the "verie" reference in his signature when it came up in an unrelated search. I found it amusing that he's still making fun of the entire AM DX community by ridiculing their standard term for verifications of reception.

I had moved on (as most former SW listeners have)... but DX Ass continues to obsess about this and totally refuses to look at all the evidence.

That is the good news. The bad news is that Cuhu also posted that he leaves his phone unplugged except when he wants to make an outgoing call.

Does anyone have his real name (Larry Ryan ?) and address? If so, it seems like the next step would be for one of us to call some kind of organization in his town (police, Traveler's Aid, Red Cross, whatever) and see if anything could be found out that way.

Hay Burr, Cuho is a Viet Vet. We, someone, could try the local VFW, Legion, or Viet Nam Vet org. I don't know if he is a member of any of them. Could be a place to start. BTW, he has gotten quiet before, but, never for this long. I do remember him posting about how dangerous his Wal-Mart was. He could be lost somewhere in the store. Hope for some luck.

In case anyone here is interested...

A new web page with several articles about UFOs & the Space Brothers by multiple authors has been launched at this url:

http://www.mindlight.info/spacebrothers/index_ufos.htm

Q. How much does the desire for power and control figure into the reason that the governments have been keeping UFO information from the public?

A. It is paramount. It is ignorance and fear that drives the governments to act as they do. They understand that if humanity knew that the Space Brothers really existed, and these spacecraft with such a command of space and time really existed, we could ask them to help, because our governments obviously do not know what to do. They could advise and teach humanity. Who needs governments like we have today when we have these beneficent, harmless beings waiting to help us?

Q. If Space Brothers live on the etheric plane how do they manifest on the physical plane so that we can see them?

A. It is a temporary thing. When a Space Person comes to Earth and wants to be seen he has to lower the vibration of his etheric body to come within our range of sight. The same applies to the spacecraft.
These vehicles are made of etheric physical matter and if you do not have etheric vision they are invisible. But they are seen by hundreds of thousands of people all over the world when the occupants lower the rate of vibration of the vehicle.

Q. What is our relationship to Mars that brings them here to help us?
A. It is a neighbouring planet at about the same level of evolution as Earth, although technologically far more advanced, so they can be of help. They want to help. They like to help fellow planets who are lagging behind, who are in trouble, who are misusing nuclear energy and causing the planet and themselves to suffer. They have a great heart and wish to help humanity. They do it out of love.

A New America www.NewAmericaMovie.com is a documentary film that outlines the history of the Progressive movement in America over the last century. It analyzes how Progressive ideology has transformed public policy, the structures of government, and its potential impact on the country’s future. An example of historical analysis contained in the film would be the argument that the Progressive ideals employed
by FDR’s New Deal were the cause of the Great Depression, not the solution to it.

Through interviews with Constitutional scholars, authors, historians, public policymakers, and others, it reviews the original intent of the Founders, why it is important and lays out how Progressivism is in

As socialistworker.org admits, http://socialistworker.org/2003-2/471/471_09_Fascism.shtml
the left routinely applies the term "fascist" to any Republican political leader. In Britain The Guardian, BBC, and other liberal media pounced on purported links between the Bush family and corporations that had dealings with Nazi Germany. The fact that Prescott Bush, George W. Bush's grandfather, was a "director and shareholder" with companies that had indirect financial dealings with Germany in the 1930s would hardly seem damning, however. Much the same could be said for many other affluent individuals in America or Britain at the time. Every American today with mutual fund holdings is invested, at least indirectly, in Hugo Chavez's Venezuela. Does that make them Marxist revolutionaries?

Talk of Hitler became a lot more common during the Bush years, when it was accepted wisdom on the left that George Bush was worse than Hitler. Then there was Nancy Pelosi, who spent weeks back in 2010 complaining of the Tea Party's so-called "swastika signs" -- signs that did not signal an alliance with fascism but opposition to it. Pelosi was hardly alone in accusing the Tea Party of fascism. Marc Rubin, writing for examiner.com, referred to Tea Party members as "text book fascists." He went on to pin the neo-fascist label on Tom Tancredo, presumably because of Tancredo's concerns over illegal immigration. If those concerns make Tancredo a fascist, they would make the majority of Americans who share those concerns fascists as well. But that's pretty much how the left sees America.

The immediate response of liberals such as Chris Matthews http://www.mrc.org/biasalert/2011/20110412110017.aspx to the Ryan "Path to Prosperity" was to characterize it as a killer not just of babies and old people but of "half the people who watch this show." This attempt to portray the GOP plan as genocidal is just another example of the fascist rhetoric. It appears that Matthews is attempting to portray the Ryan plan as some sort of Final Solution.

It's not just loose cannons on MSNBC who resort to fascist innuendo. Obama's speechwriters are good at crafting sinister suggestions even without using the "F" word. Obama's budget speech of April 13 actually set the tone for the current debate. With Rep. Ryan sitting on the front row, Obama lectured his audience that the GOP plan would kick "someone's grandparents" out of nursing homes and cause children with autism and Down's syndrome to "fend for themselves." It is well known that Hitler sent legions of the disabled to concentration camps to be gassed, but the suggestion that a plan to actually save Medicare and Medicaid resembles the Holocaust, if that is what Obama intended, is repellent. It was one more proof, as if we needed any more, of a fatal weakness in the character of this President. He is a man whose entire existence is devoted to gutter politics. For such a man, statesmanship and dignified leadership are inconceivable.

The plain truth is that America can no longer afford this sort of reckless partisanship on the part of the chief executive. The fact that Obama disagrees with Rep. Ryan's budget plan does not justify accusations of killing sick children or tossing old folks out on the street. That kind of rhetoric may pass for wit in the sixth grade, but it is juvenile coming from the President.

"It is obvious what the fraudulent issue of fascism versus communism accomplishes: it sets up, as opposites, two variants of the same political system; it eliminates the possibility of considering capitalism; it switches the choice of “Freedom or dictatorship?” into “Which kind of dictatorship?”—thus establishing dictatorship as an inevitable fact and offering only a choice of rulers. The choice—according to the proponents of that fraud—is: a dictatorship of the rich (fascism) or a dictatorship of the poor (communism)."

"That fraud collapsed in the 1940’s, in the aftermath of World War II. It is too obvious, too easily demonstrable that fascism and communism are not two opposites, but two rival gangs fighting over the same territory—that both are variants of statism, based on the collectivist principle that man is the rightless slave of the state—that both are socialistic, in theory, in practice, and in the explicit statements of their leaders—that under both systems, the poor are enslaved and the rich are expropriated in favor of a ruling clique—that fascism is not the product of the political “right,” but of the “left”—that the basic issue is not “rich versus poor,” but man versus the state, or: individual rights versus totalitarian government—which means: capitalism versus socialism."

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - 1952 - http://mises.org/books/planningforfreedom_mises.pdf

The origins of the modern left can be traced back to the famous passage in Rousseau’s Discourse on the Origin and Foundations of Inequality, in which he condemned the institution of private property:

“The first man, who after enclosing a piece of ground, took it into his head to say, ‘this is mine,’ and found people simple enough to believe him, was the real founder of civil society.”

Added Rousseau: “How many crimes, how many wars, how many murders, how many misfortunes and horrors, would that man have saved the human species, who pulling up the stakes or filling up the ditches should have cried to his fellows: Beware of listening to this impostor; you are lost, if you forget that the fruits of the earth belong equally to us all, and the earth itself to nobody!”

Around the 1830s, a faction of French liberals gravitated toward Romanticism and the philosophy of the late Rousseau, proclaiming that capitalism, private property, and the increasing complexity of modern society were agents of moral decay -- both for the individual and for society at large. This is essentially the worldview that has made its way, through history, into the collective mind of the modern left; it is a worldview calling for a revolution that not only will topple the existing capitalist order and punish its corrupt leaders, but that also will replace that order with a socialist regime where the utopian ideals of perfect justice and equality will reign. Such an ambition can be put into effect only by a totalitarian state with the authority to micromanage every facet of human life, precisely the end-point toward which the policies and crusades of the modern left are directed.

When the term “liberalism” (from the Latin word liberalis, meaning “pertaining to a free man”) first emerged in the early 1800s, its hallmarks were a belief in individual rights, the rule of law, limited government, private property, and laissez faire economics. These would remain the defining characteristics of liberalism throughout the liberal epoch (generally identified as the period of 1815-1914). Yet the modern left, which portrays itself as the agent of enlightened commitment to “liberal” causes, in fact stands for the antithesis of each of the foregoing liberal ideals. Contrary to its self-definition, the left is neither “liberal” nor “progressive,” but rather a reactionary force that seeks to resurrect the traditions that characterized the epoch which preceded the rise of classical liberalism.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent.

against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

When you hear the Liberal Fascist JackAss propaganda that THEY are the true patriots then you know the time is near. Look for it from the socialist Labor Unions such as the SEIU!
http://www.discoverthenetworks.org/groupProfile.asp?grpid=6535

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

Fascism should more appropriately be called Corporatism because it is

Benito Mussolini

Fascism should rightly be called Corporatism, as it is the merger of corporate and government power.
Benito Mussolini

it is impossible for liberals to be fascists. fascists hate liberals, trade unionist, socialists, communists, jews(because most of them are liberal), the weak, the disabled, minorities, homosexuals. they are intolerant of other views and religions. they practice bigotry, racism, and homophobia, etc. say, i just described the modern here are the three 3 phases of conservative decay.

1.conservatism(policies always fail)
2. libertarianism(the drive for purity, the conservative polices and those that implemented them, were not pure enough)
3. fascism(the rise of the strong man to ensure purity), the strongman will drive out the impure, liberals, jews, immigrants, trade unionists, communists, socialists, those with mental and physical defects, gypsies, etc. this to fails on a huge scale. just look what happened to the central european fascists. they collapsed their economies, and came up millions of workers and soldiers short.

conservatives are always saying its the left that hates:you can always tell whats on the mind of a conservative, when they accuse others of what they themselves are thinking:Don’t Re-Nig the racist anti-Obama bumper sticker appears real well the left is only responding to the overwhelming hate being spewed by conservatives

http://news.yahoo.com/blogs/sideshow/racist-don-t-nig-anti-obama-bumper-sticker-162917634.html

‘Don’t Re-Nig,’ the racist anti-Obama bumper sticker, appears real

By Eric Pfeiffer

Is this racist, anti-Obama bumper sticker real?
An image purporting to show a racist, anti-Obama bumper sticker on the back of a vehicle has been garnering lots of attention on Facebook in the past 24 hours.
The bumper sticker reads, "Don't Re-Nig in 2012." And in smaller print below, "Stop repeat offenders. Don't' reelect Obama!" The sticker also features an image of the Obama campaign logo crossed out.
Several viewers have claimed the image has been digitally altered. After all, it seems shocking that someone would proudly display an openly racist image on their vehicle in 2012. So, is the image authentic?
In short, yes.
It's still unclear is the image of the vehicle has been altered in any way, but a website called "Stumpy's Stickers" offers the bumper sticker for sale for $3. And as The Root points out, the site also several other racially insensitive items for sale as well. The urban myth debunking site Snopes says it cannot yet determine the origins of the photo, but also points out the availability of other similar t-shirts and bumper stickers.

There is even an eponymous "Dontre-nig.com" website that appears to have crashed. Going to the page brings up a "Bandwith Limit Exceeded" warning message. I checked the domain registration service site WHOIS, which listed the site as belonging to an anonymous owner who purchased the URL through the company DomainsByProxy.com, based in Scottsdale, Arizona. The company specializes in keeping the names of Internet domain owners private.

And as one astute Facebook reader pointed out, the bumper sticker is not only offensive, it's pretty dumb. After all, if you take the top message at its literal meaning, to not renege in 2012, would mean to in fact re-elect President Obama.

Liberty Net: March 10, 2012

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

THESE LIBERTY NET articles arenï¿½t necessarily a summary of the whole net ï¿½ or even the best parts thereof. Some people have asked how my excerpts are chosen. Theyï¿½re just a few highlights that Iï¿½ve picked, often from the first two or three hours of the net, with an eye toward encouraging you to listen to the whole recording. You shouldnï¿½t take offense if a favorite station or topic wasnï¿½t chosen to be highlighted ï¿½ to include all of the superb and interesting topics discussed on the net would take an article ten times as long as this one!

Here are some of the subjects that net participants talked about during this weekï¿½s Liberty Net session:

ï¿½ A resolution has been introduced in Congress, calling for the investigation and impeachment of Obama for illegally waging war in Libya. (21 minutes)

ï¿½ A White schoolchild in Kansas City was recently doused with gasoline and set on fire by two Blacks, who shouted ï¿½This is what you deserve, White boy.ï¿½ Itï¿½s been discovered that teachers at the majority-Black school there have been showing virulently anti-White films during ï¿½Black history monthï¿½ and claiming that ï¿½all Whitesï¿½ are responsible for ï¿½racismï¿½ and ï¿½oppressionï¿½ of Blacks. The burning victim just happens to be the only White student in one such class. (32 minutes)

ï¿½ It is estimated by the Gang Intelligence Center (GIC) that there are over 1.4 million active gang members in the United States, who are responsible for about half of all violent crimes. Now that the GIC has reported that almost all gang members are illegal immigrants and Blacks, the Washington regime has announced plans to de-fund the GIC. (36 minutes)

ï¿½ Itï¿½s ironic that the Russian news service, Pravda, which was infamous for suppressing news during Communist rule there, is now, along with RT, one of the leading free sources of news that the oligarchsï¿½ media in the US are covering up. (41 minutes)

ï¿½ The misnamed US Department of Justice is totally out of control. It has recently arrogated to itself the ï¿½rightï¿½ to shut down any Internet domains using the .com, .net, or .org suffixes, no matter where they operate in the world. They recently shut down a perfectly legal Canadian football gaming site, using ï¿½homeland securityï¿½ as a transparently false excuse. Expect this precedent to be used for politically-motivated shutdowns, too. (50 minutes)

ï¿½ The Washington regime has found a new way to oppress and steal from the weakest and most vulnerable among us: They are planning to send tax bills to those whose credit card debt has been forgiven, treating the forgiven debt as ï¿½taxable income.ï¿½ (54 minutes)

ï¿½ A new book ï¿½ The Rise of the Black Serial Killer ï¿½ conclusively disproves the myth that serial killers are disproportionately White. (1 hour)

ï¿½ Has ï¿½Affirmative Actionï¿½ paradoxically fueled the rise of Black serial killers by seriously impairing the competence of police detectives? (1 hour 18 minutes)

ï¿½ Iceland ï¿½ in addition to being the first country to tell the bankers to go take a hike ï¿½ has now become the first nation to put a former prime minister on trial for being complicit in the bankersï¿½ frauds and deceptions. (1 hour 23 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to the Liberty Net right now on your computer here at http://3950.net/ ï¿½ or download the file and listen on your portable mp3 player. Check in via your ham rig, and also check out the live feed and chat during net times, and the additional feed from N2SAG, that let you make an end run around jammers and a fickle ionosphere.

Join in or listen to the most exciting net on the amateur bands every Saturday night starting at 10PM Eastern Time.

Our thanks go to W1WCR for his hard work and courage in keeping this very important part of the amateur radio service alive since 1974!

With enough will and determination, and enough contributions, it's never too late to prosecute or sue.

ROTFLOL!!!!! you do not even know what you are. the commander and chief must make sure america is strong.

do you agree with these statements.

1. The government must take steps to lower the cost of production and widen the profit margin.
2. Lower taxes
3. Reduce the size of government.
4. Lower unemployment insurance benefit
5. The government must allow wages to progress to lower levels, by voiding labor contracts and binding arbitration.

"We must take from state authority those functions for which it is incompetent and which it performs badly... I believe the state should renounce its economic functions, especially those carried out through monopolies, because the state is incompetent in such matters... We must put an end to state railways, state postal service and state insurance."
"hasten the privatization of municipal enterprises."
"We have broken with the practice of persecuting capital."

Early Sunday morning and the AWOL mainstream media has missed the proverbial boat on the latest Executive Order signed Friday by President Barack Hussein Obama.

Executive Order “National Defense Resources Preparedness”, in effect nationalizes all the energy, food and water currently existing on American soil.

The EO is cunningly covered under the auspices of Peace Time Martial Law at the discretion of one man.

Although now posted on the Drudge Report, at the time of this writing, only scant reportage on the Web about the signing away of liberty and individual rights.

Tea Party leaders and patriots doing Paul Revere duty by disseminating the news of Obama’s latest executive order must have sent word to websites other than Canada Free Press (CFP) overnight.

As large as life, Executive Order “National Defense Resources Preparedness” is up there on the White House website, or as one patriot wrote in her email: “Hot off the Government press”.

“National Defense Resources Preparedness” follows by two days the major distraction of the Obama-fawning Prime Minister David Cameron’s bundler-attended Official State Dinner on Wednesday.

The terms of the executive order bringing all life-giving constants, including water and food, under absolute Government control make the dire, big-brother predictions of Orwell’s 1984 look tame by comparison.

This Executive Order was posted on the WhiteHouse.gov web site on Friday, March 16, 2012, under the name National Defense Resources Preparedness. In a nutshell, it’s the blueprint for Peacetime Martial Law and it gives the president the power to take just about anything deemed necessary for “National Defense”, whatever they decide that is. It’s peacetime, because as the title of the order says, it’s for “Preparedness”. A copy of the entire order follows the end of this story.

Under this order the heads of these cabinet level positions; Agriculture, Energy, Health and Human Services, Transportation, Defense and Commerce can take food, livestock, fertilizer, farm equipment, all forms of energy, water resources, all forms of civil transporation (meaning any vehicles, boats, planes), and any other materials, including construction materials from wherever they are available. This is probably why the government has been visiting farms with GPS devices, so they know exactly where to go when they turn this one on.

Specifically, the government is allowed to allocate materials, services, and facilities as deemed necessary or appropriate. They decide what necessary or appropriate means.

In a crisis situation, the government will be able to take whatever they need, print money to get whatever they want and distribute it as they see fit….for the benefit of a “war effort” or the politically connected corporations and individuals. All other contracts except those for employment are superseded by this executive order, it’s all here in black and white.

Specifically, it orders:

“to require acceptance and priority performance of contracts or orders (other than contracts of employment) to promote the national defense over performance of any other contracts or orders, and to allocate materials, services, and facilities as deemed necessary or appropriate to promote the national defense, is delegated to the following agency heads:

the Secretary of Agriculture with respect to food resources, food resource facilities, livestock resources, veterinary resources, plant health resources, and the domestic distribution of farm equipment and commercial fertilizer;
the Secretary of Energy with respect to all forms of energy;

the Secretary of Health and Human Services with respect to health resources;
the Secretary of Transportation with respect to all forms of civil transportation;
the Secretary of Defense with respect to water resources; and the Secretary of Commerce with respect to all other materials, services, and facilities, including construction materials.

About all I can say is “Have a nice day!”

I think everyone here misses Chas's point. He's just seen an enlightening documentary film that clearly shows the linkages between "progressivism" and fascism. He's been enlightened and wishes to share the truth with us all. In fact, there are linkages between socialism (at least Marxist socialism, Leninism and Stalinism), various manifestations of populism, and fascism. They all appeal to men who are frustrated, feel powerless and abused and who want to take control, take revenge, and restructure things according to some bizarre scheme or another. What he's missed is the fact that cracking skulls for the Red Flag, the Back Shirt or the Swastika, is still cracking skulls. The brutality serves the same psychological purpose. All radical ideologies, right and left, tend to create idiots and monsters who appeal to the feelings of frustration, inferiority and powerlessness that infest whole blocks of people, mostly working class and lower middle income (but the thrill of participating in a power structure can appeal to anyone in any class). For the wealthy, it can ensure and redouble their wealth. For frustrated bureaucrats, it can give them power and create opportunities for graft and corruption that never existed before. What Chas doesn't realize is that he's being manipulated by propagandists who reduce the complexities of ideology, social psychology and government policy into a good and evil formula and then heaps all the blame for evil on the enemy, in this case "progressives." Well, Chas, it was definitely not "progressives" who caused WWI which in turn generated Communism in the East and Fascism and Nazism in Central Europe and Japan, brought on WWII and pushed Communism into China. The ultimate mover in all the horrors of the 20th Century were the Conservatives who ran the governments of Russia, Germany, Austria, Italy, and Great Britain, who cased the conflagration of 1914 and the horrible aftermath that plagued us throughout the 20th Century.

I don't recall saying any such thing.

But for the record...it was OK to declare martial law because:

1. New Orleans is an American city.

2. There was widespread devastation and looting and violence.

3. The Mayor and Governor both failed and implored the Feds to step in.

I can't see where the number of "blacks living there" is a factor, but maybe Nobama can spin something up for you racist libs on that account...

Weekly Highlights and Forecasts
#
Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
12 - 18 March 2012

Solar activity was at low to high levels during the period. Region 1429 (N17, L = 299, class/area Dkc/1270 on 07 March) produced the largest event of the period, an M7/1b x-ray flare at 13/1741 UTC.
Associated with this event, were a 1400 sfu Tenflare, a Type II and a Type IV radio sweep, with an estimated shock velocity of 1366 km/s, and finally an asymmetric full-halo CME, visible in both LASCO C2 and C3 imagery. Plane-of-sky speed, as measured from LASCO imagery was 1375 km/s. The CME associated with this event was forecast to become geoeffective. As Region 1429 approached the west limb, finally rotating off on 16 March, Region 1432 (N14, L = 223, class/area Esi/100 on 15 March) became active and produced two
M-class events. The largest was an M2/1n x-ray event at 14/1521 UTC.
A faint CME, visible in LASCO C2 imagery, was observed with a plane-of-sky speed of 392 km/s. On 15 March, a second M-class event, an M1/1f x-ray event at 15/0752 UTC, was also observed. A Type II radio sweep with an estimated shock velocity of 468 km/s was associated with this event. Both CME’s associated with the solar flares from Region 1432 were expected to arrive at Earth, but with such slow speeds and a coronal hole high speed stream (CH HSS) preceding them, very little effects were forecast. Finally, Region 1434 (S22, L = 205, class/area on 11 March) produced an M1/Sf x-ray event at 17/2039 UTC. Another Type II radio sweep with an estimated shock velocity of 1140 km/s was associated with this event. However, the associated CME with this event was not expected to become geoeffective. Aside from the M-class x-ray events, multiple C-class events were observed during the period. Many of the solar regions remained active as they evolved around the disk, but Region 1435 (S25, L = 220, class/area Dao/150 on 18 March) showed rapid growth towards the end of the summary period.

Two separate greater than 10 MeV proton events were observed during the summary period. The period began with the greater than 10 MeV proton flux above the 10 pfu threshold. This event was associated with the X5/3b x-ray flare observed on 07/0024 UTC. This event began on 07/0510 UTC, reached a maximum flux of 6530 pfu on 08/1115 UTC, and dropped below the 10 pfu threshold at 12/2050 UTC. The second event, began on 13 March and was associated the M7/1b x-ray event, mentioned earlier, from old Region 1429 (N18, L = 299). This greater than 10 MeV proton event began at 13/1810 UTC, reached a maximum flux of 469 pfu on 13/2045 UTC, and dropped below the 10 pfu threshold on 15/0620 UTC. A greater than 100 MeV proton event was also associated with the M7/1b x-ray event. This event began at 13/1810 UTC, reached a maximum flux of 1 pfu at 13/1905 UTC, and dropped below the 1 pfu threshold at 13/2255 UTC.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at moderate to high levels for the entire summary period.

The geomagnetic field ranged from quiet to major storm periods with isolated severe storm periods observed at high latitudes. The summary period began at quiet levels, however midday on 12 March, a shock was observed by the ACE spacecraft with a Sudden Impulse of 96 nT, later observed by the Boulder magnetometer. This activity was due to the arrival of a CME associated with the 10 March M8 x-ray event from Region 1429. Measurements by the ACE spacecraft showed the solar wind speed increased from around 450 km/s to 775 km/s. The Interplanetary Magnetic Field (IMF) also increased from around 6 nT to 28 nT. As the effects of the CME continued, periods of major storms were observed with isolated sever storm levels at high latitudes from 12/0900-1500 UTC. From 13-14 March, quiet to active levels were recorded as effects from this CME event waned. On 15 March, another CME arrival was observed with another shock recorded by the ACE spacecraft, followed by a Sudden Impulse of 27 nT measured at the Boulder magnetometer. Solar wind measurements, as recorded by the ACE spacecraft, showed wind speeds around 800 km/s following the shock. Once again, quiet to major storms were observed at mid latitudes with isolated periods at sever storm levels at high latitudes. For the remainder of the summary period, 16-18 March, solar wind speeds remained elevated, well above 500 km/s, in response to a CH HSS behind the CME arrival on 15 March. The combined effects of the CME and CH HSS produced quiet to active levels at mid latitudes with continued minor to major storm periods observed at high latitudes.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
19 March - 14 April 2012

Solar activity is expected to remain at low levels from 19 -26 March. On March 27, and then March 28, old Region 1430 (N22, L = 318) and Region 1429 (N18, L = 299) are expected to return, respectively. Even though these regions are on the far side of the solar disk, imagery supports that they are still active and producing CMEs. An increase to low to moderate levels is expected from 28 March - 11 April as both regions populate to front side of the solar disk. A return to predominantly low levels is expected to prevail for the remainder of the forecast period.

No proton events are forecast from 19 - 29 March. An increase to a slight chance for proton events is forecast from 30 March - 11 April as old Region 1429 populates the visible disk. A return to background proton flux levels is expected from 12 April - 14 April.

Electrons, greater than 2 MeV, are expected to be at high levels from 18-25 March. A decrease to normal to moderate levels is expected from 26 - 28 March. From 29 March - 03 April, a return to moderate to high levels is forecast. From 04 April, through the end of the forecast period, 14 April, a return to normal to moderate levels is expected.

The geomagnetic field is expected to be at quiet to active levels on 19-20 March, in response to the arrival and lingering effects of a CME. Predominantly quiet levels are expected to prevail from 21-27 March. On 28 - 31 March, a CH HSS is expected to become geoeffective with quiet to active conditions expected. Quiet conditions are expected from 01 - 02 April. From 03 - 04 April, quiet to unsettled conditions are expected as another CH HSS moves into a geoeffective position. Predominantly quiet levels are expected to continue from 05 - 12 April. From 13-14 April, a CH HSS is expected to become geoeffective.

Hello everyone...

I have just purchased (10 bucks) a Lafayette HA-230 receiver.

Person I purchased it from says that it belonged to his dad and it worked fine when his dad used it seven years ago.

His dad died and he has had it stored for the seven years.

He says that he plugged it in and it lights up but he could not get it to receive. It did not appear to me however that he knew how to use it.

I would like some advice from you guys here that have used/worked on this model receiver.

After sitting for seven years, what should I do to the unit before trying to use it myself?

I did plug it in and the lights do come on, but I did not hook it up to an antenna. I wanted to check for scratchy switches on the front panel.

I found a couple that need to be cleaned and I read in a post last night that the band selector switch should be cleaned as well.

I am also wondering if there are any "known caps" (or other parts) that should be replaced right off the bat?

I am not a tech but have done minor repairs to CB radio equipment for many years. Thinks like replacing drivers, finals, caps, protection diodes, LED panels and the like.

I have no injection equipment or scopes, just my trusty VOM's. And of course, a dozen or so good soldering irons.

May I please have your comments/advise/suggestions on obvious things to do before I start using the radio?

Thank you very much for your time and help,
John

PS - What specs would be ok to use for an antenna just for a testing and working on before I put up a full blown 100' antenna?

Never worked on this specific radio, but generic free advice cheerfully given -- and worth every penny! :-)

Absolutely the first thing you do is download and read the free instruction manual available from this site:

http://bama.edebris.com/manuals/lafayett/ha230/

Read the part about "How to operate" before you do anything else; it could be something as simple as the "receive-standby" switch (if so equipped) being in the standby position or something else equally as simple.

Try an antenna; just a 10 foot hunk of wire across the floor should suffice for testing. If this radio covers the MW broadcast band, try it there first, tuned to a local station.

If still no joy, try removing and re-seating each tube. Make sure no tubes are missing, dark or in the wrong socket.

Next, use your VOM to check for B+ at various places around the rig, using the schematic you downloaded above.

Generic troubleshooting tips...

Put your finger on the GRID of the first audio stage and then the audio output stage. You should hear a hum in the speaker if the audio stage is working (this radio DOES have an internal speaker, right?). BEFORE you put your finger on the GRID of the audio output stage, use your VOM to make sure the voltage on the grid is very low or slightly negative. If the interstage coupling capacitor is leaky, a lot of the B+ from the first audio stage will be present and give you a shock. MEASURE FIRST.

With the HA-230 set for the broadcast band, you can use a separate AM transistor radio to see if the oscillator is working.

That should give you a few ideas to start with.

Good luck and let us know what you find.

Greater Lawlessness Causes Great Recessions
Posted: 03/19/2012 5:25 pm

We know Greg Smith's unveiling of Goldman Sachs' "culture" of profits ahead of clients' interests was nothing new. And that real laws were broken -- from conflicts of interest to outright fraud. The 2010 congressional hearings unveiled much of the double dealing that was rationalized by Goldman Sachs' buyer-beware code -- its clients should be sophisticated enough to know that Goldman would try to maximize its own profits, before those of its clients.
But other laws were broken, as well as economic rules that govern sound business practices, in the run up to the Great Recession. Pundits have traced the decline of Wall Street ethics from the morphing of partnership-owned investment banks to financial corporations, as well as the enormous growth of financial markets that bred outright greed.
But there is little mention of the behavior that caused our economic decline into the Great Recession. Behind this culture of greed and unethical behavior was a culture of greater lawlessness that can be traced back to the early 1980s when President Ronald Reagan trumpeted that government was the problem and more private enterprise the solution for greater prosperity.

In attempting to downgrade governmental powers, conservative regimes in particular began to consciously disregard the laws of our land -- from enforcement of existing regulations, to Iran-contra gun-running in President Reagan's case, to abrogating international treaties such as START and political muzzling Department of Justice attorneys general under G.W. Bush, to name just a few cases.
The number of convicted criminals in those administrations tells part of the story. President Reagan's administration was marked by multiple scandals, resulting in the investigation, indictment, or conviction of over 138 administration officials, the largest number for any U.S. president.
And Salon.com had documented 34 incidents of law-breaking in just the first 4 years of G.W. Bush's Presidency, the most blatant being unmasking covert CIA operative Valerie Plame, and its fabricated claims that Iraq had weapons of mass destruction.
But even more damage was the disregard of basic economic safeguards by successive Republican administrations. It was really the attempt of Big Business to unravel the economic safeguards of the New Deal, first spelled out in Paul Krugman's The Great Unraveling, by advocating massive budget deficits to pay for a Pax Americana -- with especially severe consequences for the old and poor.
"Deficits don't matter" was the infamous chant of Bush VP Dick Cheney.
At a time when economic inequality had risen to levels last seen in the 1920s, these administrations wanted to divert attention from a vanishing social safety net by proposing the ago-old Darwinian solution -- the free market. For only the fittest will survive in a world ruled by self-interest, rather than laws and regulations.
The United States, beginning in the 1980s once again became the most ardent advocate and practitioner of the oldest form of capitalism, now a primitive relic of 18th century enlightenment. This is but one part of our aging democracy that U.S. hegemonists put up as the model for western civilization. But it is a very imperfect model for the rest of the world as well. A 2002 survey of 38,000 people in 44 countries by the Pew Center for the People and the Press found what they think of our American Way. "Since 2000, favorability ratings for the U.S. have fallen in 19 of the 27 countries where trend benchmarks are available ... pluralities in most of the nations surveyed complain about American unilateralism," says the study. They think we disregard their interests in pursuit of our own self-interest.
Few dispute that our capitalistic economic system has won the day. It produces great wealth, particularly for those at the top of the wealth pyramid. Robert Reich's book, The Future of Success said it best: "By the end of the (20th) century, the richest 1 percent of American families, comprising 2.7 million people, had as many dollars to spend after taxes as the bottom 100 million."
But not for the 99 percent majority, in other words. Why so much greed, and willful lawlessness? This last happened in the 1920s run up to the Great Depression. Fear overruled both laws and financial common sense, so that the lobbyists of self-interest came to the fore. Our economy was being transformed -- from rural to industrial economy, which drove workers into the cities. Wages plunged along with prices, and so did economic activity for more than 10 years. It was only Roosevelt's New Deal that brought benefits to the larger majority of citizens and leveled the economic playing field.

The same has happened today. Conservatives are again impoverishing the economy in their attempt to destroy our working class as we know it, by passing laws that ban collective bargaining in states like Wisconsin, or right to work laws that say workers do not have to pay union dues even though they derive the benefits from belonging to a union. We know the results in Wisconsin after one year. Employment has plunged and is the worst of the Midwest states that surround it, according to the Economic Policy Institute.

It is no coincidence that those 23 states that have passed right to work laws are also the poorest states, with the highest income inequality, lowest educational achievement, and receive the most in public subsidies. Taking incomes and wealth away from those states' workers can only make them poorer in relation to other states and regions, and be a continuing drain on public finances.

That is the real lesson of our greater lawlessness. By choosing to break laws and regulations that govern economic activity, some economies are being pushed back to levels of past centuries. For workers will only produce more and better products and services when they have the incentive to do so.

In the end, such greater lawlessness means a disregard for everyone but one's own clan or tribe, a greater selfishness, and no country can remain prosperous with such a breakdown in social welfare. That is the lesson learned from the Great Depression and Great Recession. Policies that ignore economic as well as civil laws, that continue to divert incomes and wealth to the wealthiest, impoverish the majority.

I rest my case... there are hundreds of thousands of pages of NNRC, IRCA, NRC and other club bulletins referring to "veries" as the accepted term for AM verifications as well as countless magazine articles, columns and references. Of course, the facts would get in the way of your obstinate point of view. Just out of curiosity, has anyone actually seen the QSLs for your claimed 225 confirmed countries? You protest proven facts way too much to be for real.

Of course. That's the purpose of right to work laws -- decrease the incomes of workers in order to increase the profits of corporations, partnerships, and proprietorships. What is amazing is that some of the people whose income is being depressed actually support this kind of legislation. I believe that this is the kind of folks that the teabaggers call "morans."

its hard to believe that educated people can fall for the conservative/libertarian/fascist crap. maybe once they are forced into having dozens of children, driven into grinding poverty, denied the right to vote, living in card board shacks, they may look back at what they threw away. the idiots all pine for the 1940's-1970's, yet they hate the ones who brought it to them, liberals.
how many of those type of idiots, believe that driving workers into poverty, will heal the economy. its amazing there are those stupid enough to believe in austerity, another crank conservative/libertarian/fascist theory that was completely discredited over 80 years ago.

Actually, it takes some signal to verify scratchy switches and pots. Unless there's DC on the volume control, if there's no audio, ther won't be any significant scratchy noise. If there's no signal, you won't know if the switches are closing, or not. So, hook up the antenna, and at least get some atmospheric noise going so you have a real idea where things really lie.

> I found a couple that need to be cleaned and I read in a post last night

Absolutely. The radio has been sitting unused for years. Switch contacts, unmoved, oxidize. Depending on configuration, you may only need to get a signal into the radio, and move the bandswitch a few times to bring things to life. Before you go spraying into the works, you may wish to try that. Many sprays will cause a detuning of some higher frequency circuits.

At this age, filter caps can go. In fact, you'll probably discover that nearly all electrolytics can be replaced. On this vintage rig, I also replace all foil and paper caps, with Sprague Orange drops. The improvement in caps will result in a corresponding improvement in performance. Especially audio.

Also, it's a good idea to replace any ceramic discs with temperature compensated metalized polystyrene, polypropylene or teflon caps. Especially in audio circuits. Ceramic discs are just terrible capacitors.

You have more than enough experience to get you started.

If you can find a Sams Photofact, or a schematic on a site like Mods.dk, you can get all the data you need to touch up the alignment. Ideally, a calibrated signal or marker generator would be a basic tool, but if you can get your antenna connected, and get a readable signal, WWV will be an excellent frequency standard for alignment. Start at the last IF and work your way forward. A broadcast station will also have good, though not always excellent frequency calibration, or stability, but zeroing in on the carrier is a practical solution, absent the desired tools.

Check the tubes, too. You won't find a tube checker in a Radio Shack, or a drug store, anymore, but a well establised TV repair shop will have one. They'll be glad to test them, and may be able to sell you necessary replacements.

If you can't find anyone to help you with this, you can always find a Hickock tube tester, or a TV7/U on eBay or craigslist for a practical sum.

100' may be overkill, but it will get you some atmospheric noise. :) For testing, 20-30 feet of wire, worked against an earth ground will be more than enough.

yet, you are one of them. how stupid can you get. the fun thing with you, is that you have nothing, you have so little, that you now have a cheering section that follows you where ever you go:))))

i however, have proven beyond a doubt, that austerity is a crank theory that always fails, and it did again in greece as i warned you it would. i however have proven beyond a shadow of a doubt, that conservative run economies are doomed to poverty and failure. you have nothing but worn out discredited lies.

The Bible Belt's Love Affair With (Gay and Straight) Porn
The GOP presidential hopefuls keep vilifying porn. Odd that the very people they're trying to pander to consume massive amounts of it.
March 13, 2012 |

The adult entertainment industry has long been one of the favorite whipping boys of social conservatives, who have argued that porn and other forms of adult entertainment (including strip clubs, swing clubs, phone sex and BDSM) are incompatible with the moral values of the Heartland and the Bible Belt. Porn, social conservatives claim, is for “godless liberals” in San Francisco, Greenwich Village and West Hollywood, not right-of-center voters in Republican-dominated “red states.” But the reality is that porn isn’t any less popular in so-called “red states” than it is in so-called “blue states,” and ironically, the places where the 2012 Republican presidential hopefuls are the most likely to be railing against porn are also places where an abundance of voters are likely to be consuming it.

GOP presidential hopefuls Mitt Romney, Rick Santorum and Newt Gingrich have not only been playing the abortion and gay marriage cards—they have also assured the Christian Right organization Morality in Media (MIM) that they would be tough on porn if elected president. Former Massachusetts governor Romney, in a written statement, told MIM he favors “strict enforcement of our nation’s obscenity laws”; serial adulterer and former House of Representatives speaker Gingrich met with MIM president Patrick Truemann in person and assured him that if elected president, he would appoint an attorney general who would make federal obscenity prosecutions a high priority.

Meanwhile, in Laurens County, South Carolina, the local Republican Party is asking possible candidates to swear off all porn consumption. In late February, the Laurens County GOP unanimously adopted a resolution asking local Republicans who want to get on the primary ballot to sign a 28-point pledge that includes opposition to abortion, gay marriage and same-sex civil unions as well as vows to abstain from premarital sex and not view any porn. The pledge states: “You cannot now, from the moment you sign this pledge, look at pornography.”

Of all the GOP presidential hopefuls, Santorum has been the most stridently anti-porn; the former Pennsylvania senator (who was voted out of office in 2006) has an entire page on his Web site that is devoted to his opposition to porn, and that attacks President Barack Obama for not being sufficiently anti-porn. Santorum writes: “The Obama Administration has turned a blind eye to those who wish to preserve our culture from the scourge of pornography and has refused to enforce obscenity laws. While the Obama Department of Justice seems to favor pornographers over children and families, that will change under a Santorum Administration.”

Actually, Obama has never said anything in favor of adult entertainment. Very few Democratic politicians will openly embrace the adult entertainment industry in any way. And the more one examines the data, the more evident it becomes that Republican-dominated states with a heavy concentration of far-right culture warriors are also states where erotic entertainment is very much in demand. Adult industry advocate Bill Margold, who was one of the top adult film stars of the 1970s, has often described the United States as a place where people hypocritically condemn adult entertainment with one hand while pleasuring themselves to it with the other hand; recent data bears that out.

In 2009, Benjamin G. Edelman of the Harvard Business School published the results of a state-by-state study on the number of people who were subscribing to adult membership Web sites; Edelman found that eight of the 10 states that had the highest per capita consumption of online porn were states that Republican John McCain won in 2008’s presidential election. Utah topped the list, and other red states in Edelman’s top 10 included Oklahoma, Mississippi, Arkansas, Louisiana, Alaska, North Dakota and West Virginia. The only states in Edelman’s top 10 that Obama won in 2008 were Florida and Hawaii.

More recently, in December 2011, Rutgers University researcher/blogger Omar Haq published the results of his study on Google searches for gay porn. Haq found that between 2004-2011, the top 10 states that had the most Google searches for gay porn included five states that McCain won in 2008 (Texas, Mississippi, Kentucky, Louisiana, West Virginia) and five states that Obama won (New York, Ohio, New Mexico, Nevada and Florida). “People subscribe to a lot of porn in the southern Bible Belt states,” Haq noted. “I really believe it is suppression. Freud himself said that the more you suppress people, the more they are going to want to do something. It might be due to conservatism; I think that definitely plays a role."

Even when the data on porn consumption doesn’t show a significantly greater per capita demand for it in Republican-leaning states than in Democrat-leaning states, the data at least shows “red states” and “blue states” to be about equal in their consumption. Quentin Boyer, public relations director for Pink Visual (a major adult entertainment company), doesn’t find that per capita consumption of Pink Visual’s material is significantly higher in red states than it is in blue states, but he doesn’t find it to be significantly lower either. Boyer said that per capita, Pink Visual’s two biggest markets are California followed by Texas.

Boyer explained: “Texas is the second largest state by population, and in terms of our overall traffic, that's where it ranks as well: #2, right behind California. Interestingly, if you adjust the query to cover only mobile traffic, Texas surpasses California very slightly—they actually swap back and forth in the #1 spot, depending on the time frame selected—and moves into the #1 spot.”

Colin Rowntree, founder/president of the BDSM-oriented adult membership Web site Wasteland.com, said that red states have some of his most loyal and enthusiastic customers. “Retention of porn membership in Wasteland is significantly longer for red states and the amount of content viewed, and the length of sessions in the member area is also significantly longer for red state members.”

Texas, Rowntree added, has “double retention from any other state.” Other states at the top of Wasteland’s list when it comes to loyal subscribers, he said, include Georgia, Ohio and Illinois. The state with the lowest membership retention for Wasteland, according to Rowntree, is Democrat-leaning Vermont.

Diane C. Duke, executive director of the Free Speech Coalition, a Los Angeles-based trade organization for the adult entertainment industry, said that it is problematic to automatically equate conservatism with an opposition to porn and liberalism with being tolerant of it. Duke, who pointed out that some of porn’s most vocal critics have come from the left (including Catharine MacKinnon and the late Andrea Dworkin), asserted: “I would argue that Ron Paul would not be bad for the porn industry."

Duke added that being religious isn’t necessarily synonymous with hardcore social conservatism; she has often described herself as a church-going Lutheran, but she doesn’t consider herself a Christian fundamentalist. And it is Christian fundamentalists rather than more moderate Christians, Duke said, who are so obsessed with attacking porn. “I think that with this country being in the state that it is in right now, fear-mongering around the adult entertainment industry is absolutely ridiculous,” Duke emphasized. “Even if I were a fundamentalist, I would argue that adult entertainment is minute compared to other things.”

Whether they’re liberal/progressives or right-of-center libertarians, one thing that supporters of the adult industry—whatever their political differences—generally agree on is that of all the GOP presidential candidates, Santorum is the most vehemently anti-porn. Santorum has been quite critical of various U.S. Supreme Court decisions that he believes have proved helpful to the adult industry, including 1969’s Stanley v. Georgia (which said that mere possession of sexually explicit adult material is not a crime, even if it is obscene) and 2003’s Lawrence v. Texas (which struck down a Texas sodomy law). Stanley v. Georgia and Lawrence v. Texas were both right-to-privacy decisions, and Santorum has said that there is no right to privacy in the U.S. Constitution. In his book It Takes a Family, Santorum wrote: “Privacy. Neutrality. Free Expression. None of these terms is in the Constitution.”

Santorum, clearly, would like to see a lot more federal obscenity prosecutions—and in obscenity cases, the standard that jurors use to determine obscenity is the Miller test, which was outlined in the Supreme Court’s Miller v. California decision of 1973. According to the Miller test, sexually explicit material is legal as long as it isn’t obscene. In order for something to be obscene, it must: 1) appeal to a prurient interest when contemporary community standards are applied; 2) be patently offensive; and 3) lack serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value when taken as a whole (the so-called “SLAPS test”). In American obscenity cases, prosecutors typically hope the juries will be in the most socially conservative parts of the country. But if the data shows that a great deal of erotica is being consumed in those places, it becomes harder to make the case that the material in question is out of step with “contemporary community standards.”

Nonetheless, many Republican politicians will continue to make the false claim that porn is strictly for “blue state liberals.” And the more they push a socially conservative agenda, the more “red state” voters will consume porn—even if they are in the closet about it. Chauntelle Tibbals, a sociologist who has spent 10 years studying the adult entertainment industry and publishes the industry-oriented blog PVVonline.com (the PVV stands for “Porn Valley Vantage”), asserted: “If you teach people about sex and if people have access to information about sex, they’re more likely to regard it in a measured way and make informed decisions. In a place where the lockdown on porn is so tight, it’s not surprising to me that the interest in it and the searching for it is so high. In a place where you have more access to information about sex, there isn’t this frantic panic to see what’s going on and delve in. The stricter the regulations, the higher the interest.”

Red vs. blue family in black and white
Book outlines stark divisions
By Cheryl Wetzstein
The Washington Times
Sunday, July 25, 2010

Young parents Bristol Palin and Levi Johnston may have gotten engaged again recently, but they are still a quintessential “red” family trying to swim against the tide of family change, say two family law professors who have launched a debate about “red” and “blue” American families.
The 2004 and 2008 elections showed a divided America — and that division extends even to families, Naomi Cahn and June Carbone write in their book, “Red Families v. Blue Families: Legal Polarization and the Creation of Culture.”
In blue states, families tend to be well-educated, have high-paying jobs, be tolerant of diversity and be politically liberal. They marry later in life, have children in wedlock and are dedicated co-parents.
President Obama and first lady Michelle Obama are good examples of this “blue” paradigm, Ms. Cahn, who teaches at George Washington University, and Ms. Carbone, who teaches at the University of Missouri, said at a recent event at the New America Foundation think tank.
Red-state families, however, seem to be stuck in a time warp — they tend to be more strict in their religious beliefs and aspire to abstinence until marriage and marriage for life. But they often fall short of these goals: Red states have high rates of teen births, young (“shotgun”) marriages and divorce. Red-state families are also less likely to be college graduates, get top jobs or create households where husbands and wives share equally in parenting and chores.
This shows that “blue” families have adjusted to the evolution of America’s family culture, while “red” families have not, Ms. Cahn and Ms. Carbone said.
“The blue paradigm is the other end of the sexual revolution. Its families have been remade and the remaking is a huge success,” they wrote. But red families are still trying to live in bygone times, and when children fail to live up to lofty aspirations, these families bear the consequences.

Ms. Cahn and Ms. Carbone’s book has animated the pundits, with criticism and praise from multiple quarters.
In California, Ruth Institute founder Jennifer Roback Morse sees America’s family division through a different prism, one that was outlined in the 1940s by Harvard sociologist Carle Zimmerman.
The Norman Rockwell-style “domestic” family has been “atomizing” for decades, meaning that parents and children quickly move into individuated lives, said Mrs. Morse, a former economics professor at Yale and George Mason University.
Such an atomized — or “blue” — family culture cannot sustain itself, and constantly calls for help from the state, she said. So a division is created, but it is between families that want the state in their lives and those that don’t.
A “domestic” family culture can regenerate, Mrs. Morse said.
But, as Mr. Zimmerman said, it reappears through a “counterrevolution” against the state.
Others have called “Red Families v. Blue Families” groundbreaking: “Cahn and Carbone have updated the old maxim that the personal is political, and enormously enriched it,” Margaret Talbot wrote in the New Yorker.
“[I]f you want to find two-parent families with stable marriages and coddled kids, your best bet is to bypass Sarah Palin country and to go Nancy Pelosi territory,” scholar Jonathan Rauch wrote in National Journal magazine. That’s because in modern America, the new mantra is “*on’t form a family until after you have finished your education and are equipped for responsibility. … Adults form families,” he added.

I'm organizing a New TV Network that is focusing on the needs and voice of the human people in America and Globally. Why? Because human people are censored and are not allowed to communicate about who and what they are forced to live with.

I need human people who are seriously interested in getting back into TV Journalism and not kissing Bush or Clinton's Klan ass! We need real people, doing real news, and getting real money!

Steve, been over 2 years that I heard from him. RHF drove

U.K. Conservatives Come Up Short in Austerity Experiment
By Clive Crook Mar 20, 2012 6:00 PM CT Tue Mar 20 23:00:03 GMT 2012

Since 2010 Britain has been a laboratory for an important experiment in economic policy. The question: When economies slump and public borrowing soars, can fiscal restraint speed the recovery? Preliminary findings: No, and whatever made you think it could?
The unemployed weren’t asked whether it was all right with them, but Britain was a good place for the experiment. For a start, its government actually controls fiscal policy. On Wednesday, Finance Minister George Osborne will set out his new budget in the House of Commons and, strange as it seems in Washington, that will be that.
Osborne won’t call for Parliament to change tax rates or urge it (perhaps seriously, perhaps not) to do one thing or another. He will set policy, period.

As a place for this test, Britain had another advantage. Like the U.S.
but unlike France or Germany, it has its own currency and runs its own monetary policy. Osborne doesn’t have to frame his budgets knowing, as governments in the euro area know, that interest rates will be set somewhere else according to somebody else’s needs.

Sharp Break

Britain therefore had a lot of freedom to get fiscal policy right when the recession bore down in 2008. The Labour government then in power let automatic fiscal stabilizers work unimpeded and added a moderate amount of discretionary stimulus on top. Public borrowing surged. The Treasury said it was suspending its fiscal-policy rules until the economy was back at full strength.

In opposition, the Conservatives called this reckless. When they came to power in 2010, they announced a sharp break. To help restore financial confidence, the government would tighten fiscal policy at once. The idea was that austerity, done correctly, would promote growth. It would remove the threat of fiscal collapse. With public borrowing in check and confidence improved, the private sector would take up the slack.

It didn’t happen. Britain’s households aren’t spending, and its businesses, despite running big financial surpluses, aren’t investing. For the past 18 months output has been essentially flat, still well below its level when the recession began. Official forecasters think output won’t regain its 2008 level until 2014 -- a slower pace of recovery than Britain experienced after the Great Depression.

In one way, the figures flatter the Tories’ fiscal experiment, because the Bank of England has been more forceful than the Federal Reserve in supporting the economy with quantitative easing (where the central bank buys debt to increase the money supply). The Bank of England persisted in this approach despite high inflation, which peaked at more than 5 percent last year, against the Bank’s official target of 2 percent. Without such aggressive loosening of monetary policy, the economy would be in even worse trouble.

Together, though, monetary and fiscal policy are still doing too little to support demand. Inflation has fallen in recent months and, according to the Bank, is on track to drop below the 2 percent target. Some of last year’s inflation surge was due to an increase in value added tax, which will drop out of the numbers. Expectations of inflation have stayed well under control -- a tribute to the Bank’s ability to explain itself -- and, crucially, with unemployment still very high, there’s no sign of wage inflation.

Unavoidable Austerity

The Bank can do more QE if need be, but looser fiscal policy can and should be part of the mix. Unfortunately, the government is unlikely to admit its mistake and concede that fiscal policy has been too tight. The budget is about politics as well as economics, and one of Osborne’s tasks on Wednesday will be to divert attention from that larger issue.

So expect the usual bundle of tweaks to the tax system. The Tories and their coalition partners have been arguing about whether to trim the highest marginal rate of income tax, currently 50 percent, to curb tax avoidance. This might be done alongside a new rule to set a minimum overall tax for the rich - - akin to the Buffett rule that the Obama administration has proposed for the U.S. -- and higher taxes on the sale of expensive houses. The Treasury has also been trailing measures to spur corporate investment and a new initiative on privately financed infrastructure spending.

There'll be no great change in the overall course of fiscal policy. By making far too big a deal of it in 2010, the government locked itself into "austerity is unavoidable." This line, carried to excess, not only limits the scope for necessary short-term fiscal easing but can also undermine longer-term fiscal control. Indeed, the government's new hopes for privately financed infrastructure are a classic case in point.

The idea is to get private companies to build new roads and recover the costs later through tolls or other fees. In principle, charging users for infrastructure is a fine idea -- especially if congestion pricing is used to restrict peak demand. But it's crazy to finance what is public investment in all but name through private borrowing when the government can borrow long-term for almost nothing. Britain does need to spend more on infrastructure. Now is the perfect time to finance this through higher public borrowing. Not only would it spur demand, but in the end it would cost much less.

Criticism of David Cameron's government from Labour and its allies on the left is overdone. The fiscal tightening after 2010 wasn't as sudden or severe as they say. Cameron invited this line of attack by portraying his change of policy as brave and radical. Britain still has a big budget deficit and rising public debt. The Tories are right that longer-term fiscal consolidation is necessary: Public debt cannot rise without limit, even for a country that can print its own currency. And it's not easy for a government to commit itself credibly to "austerity tomorrow" without making some kind of down payment.

Nonetheless, a milder and longer-delayed fiscal adjustment than the one Cameron and Osborne devised was possible, and would have been smarter. A less boastful presentation of the policy when the Tories took office would have made later midcourse correction easier, and it would have been less apt to steer policy toward private financing of public investment and other fiscal absurdities. British governments have a lot of flexibility in their conduct of fiscal policy. They should conserve it, so they have it when they need it.

It is continuing, it has NOT "failed", austerity is NOT ended when an economy fails.... we can contenue to implement it and in some cases it will never be implemented until it failure has already occurred.

Austerity fails when you spend, spend and spend some more.

Is that what Greece is doing?

What Greece did to its creditors isnï¿½t new for that country, historically, but itï¿½s far worse than merely bad practice in public finance. Greece committed a grave injustice.

The real reason Greeceï¿½s government stiffed its creditors last week isnï¿½t that it couldnï¿½t come up with enough cash to make the necessary principal payments, but because it feared it wouldnï¿½t be able to afford the new sky-high interest rates it would have to pay in order to secure fresh funding.

Seriously fool, take this moment to learn something.

Is this?

We've caught a debunker red handed! Let's examine how this person skips or distorts most of the facts, and responds to paragraphs taken out of context with the original post.

Perhaps if we look at the ones that he skipped, we may see what it is that he's trying to draw attention away from...

Kurt Lochner <Capt...@worldnet.att.net> wrote in article <333B62FC.2...@worldnet.att.net>...

Mr. Lochner decided to skip this paragraph. Wonder why?...
<Skipped section #1>

Funny how you mention the Weekly World News. Ever wonder who really buys those things? Ever see anyone actually buy one? Don't you ever wonder how a company who can afford to litter the checkout counters of every supermarket in the country in addition to pharmacies and newsstands could ever stay in business when hardly anyone buys their product? Enquiring minds want to know where that money comes from. Black ops fund maybe? So keep in mind next time you see a cover of Weekly World News, what you are seeing on the cover may just be real but put there to make it appear totally insane.

< End skipped section #1>

Stuff relating to Cooper's statements back in the 1980s which appear to have become or are becoming true.

****

< Skipped section #2 >

Such as the fall of communism where the Soviet Union would give their people more and more rights (fall of Soviet Union, rise of Democracy in Russian Republics), where as the US would take rights away from their citizen's (less Constitutional Protection in the way of search and seizure, various Bill of Rights issues).

And he said it before it actually happened...

How this would cause both former adversaries to be on equal footing, where they would one day form as one central government. Hmmm. NATO accepting Russia into its membership perhaps?

< End skipped section #2 >

****
Now here's the real interesting part that Kurt didn't respond to. Maybe we should jog his memory here to see if he has any comments on this piece...

<Skipped section #3 >

- Show quoted text -

This is what really gets me about all this. I've never read this as being Cooper's claim until reading this post, but have seen it suggested in the movie "The Roswell Incident
". And what's really funny is that I checked out the story by looking up Forrestal in the library and found that he had indeed committed suicide under a very bizarre set of circumstances, very close to what is stated here. For the actual account, refer to the biography on Forrestal named 'Driven Patriot, The Life and Times of James Forrestal", by Townsend Hoopes and Douglas Brinkley. Specifically, read chapters 31 and 32. There is even a nice list of references at the end of the book for each chapter. Also look at some microfilm from your local library for the date May 23, 1949. You may find it really interesting..

Now if the US government would approve of and actually execute a 'hit' on a (retired) Secretary of Defense (the first Secretary of Defense in the history of the US), what wouldn't they do? 'Hit' a president? Hmmm...

OK, while your at the microfilm, take a peek at the front page of a large newspaper printed on March 18, 1950.You may find a few interesting things happened that day, which may or may not be related. Not necessarily with the above, but with each other.

Let me respectfully offer the following counterpoint to your Telemon's "always good commentary" statement:

He would complain of, and chastise, people responding to off-topic posts. Yet he was guilty of the same thing, with over three hundred (by actual count)off-topic posts. When Telemon was called out on this, his response was that it was OK for HIM, but not for anyone else (in other words, he tap-danced around it).

Sorry, but to me, this was clearly hypocrisy of the first degree...and I don't miss that.

Yep. I'd never have sold them together that way. I think that most just find the Dressler antenna an unwanted (and costly) distraction.

When I mention Blueberry to that married Irish woman wayyyyyyyyyyy over yonder across the big pond, I have to say/type, BlueberryBelle, ergo when I bought my dog ten years ago that woman said she had been calling the dog Blueberry, she told me I can name my dog anything I want to. I told her Bluberry (name) is good enough for me so Blueberry it is. See, when I told that married Irish woman I bought an eight weeks old Blue Heeler Australian Cattle Dog, she said, why not call her Belle? Bit, she didn't know I had already decided to call my dog Blueberry. Does that make any sense to you? It doesn't to me. www.cattledog.com

A New America www.NewAmericaMovie.com is a documentary film that outlines the history of the Progressive movement in America over the last century. It analyzes how Progressive ideology has transformed public policy, the structures of government, and its potential impact on the country’s future. An example of historical analysis contained in the film would be the argument that the Progressive ideals employed
by FDR’s New Deal were the cause of the Great Depression, not the solution to it.

Through interviews with Constitutional scholars, authors, historians, public policymakers, and others, it reviews the original intent of the Founders, why it is important and lays out how Progressivism is in conflict with that original intent.

As socialistworker.org admits, http://socialistworker.org/2003-2/471/471_09_Fascism.shtml
the left routinely applies the term "fascist" to any Republican political leader. In Britain The Guardian, BBC, and other liberal media pounced on purported links between the Bush family and corporations that had dealings with Nazi Germany. The fact that Prescott Bush, George W. Bush's grandfather, was a "director and shareholder" with companies that had indirect financial dealings with Germany in the 1930s would hardly seem damning, however. Much the same could be said for many other affluent individuals in America or

Britain at the time. Every American today with mutual fund holdings is invested, at least indirectly, in Hugo Chavez's Venezuela. Does that make them Marxist revolutionaries?

Talk of Hitler became a lot more common during the Bush years, when it was accepted wisdom on the left that George Bush was worse than Hitler. Then there was Nancy Pelosi, who spent weeks back in 2010 complaining of the Tea Party's so-called "swastika signs" -- signs that did not signal an alliance with fascism but opposition to it. Pelosi was hardly alone in accusing the Tea Party of fascism. Marc Rubin, writing for examiner.com, referred to Tea Party members as "text book fascists." He went on to pin the neo-fascist label on Tom Tancredo, presumably because of Tancredo's concerns over illegal immigration. If those concerns make Tancredo a fascist, they would make the majority of Americans who share those concerns fascists as well. But that's pretty much how the left sees America.

The immediate response of liberals such as Chris Matthews http://www.mrc.org/biasalert/2011/20110412110017.aspx to the Ryan "Path to Prosperity" was to characterize it as a killer not just of babies and old people but of "half the people who watch this show." This attempt to portray the GOP plan as genocidal is just another example of the fascist rhetoric. It appears that Matthews is attempting to portray the Ryan plan as some sort of Final Solution.

It's not just loose cannons on MSNBC who resort to fascist innuendo. Obama's speechwriters are good at crafting sinister suggestions even without using the "F" word. Obama's budget speech of April 13 actually set the tone for the current debate. With Rep. Ryan sitting on the front row, Obama lectured his audience that the GOP plan would kick "someone's grandparents" out of nursing homes and cause children with autism and Down's syndrome to "fend for themselves." It is well known that Hitler sent legions of the disabled to concentration camps to be gassed, but the suggestion that a plan to actually save Medicare and Medicaid resembles the Holocaust, if that is what Obama intended, is repellent. It was one more proof, as if we needed any more, of a fatal weakness in the character of this President. He is a man whose entire existence is devoted to gutter politics. For such a man, statesmanship and dignified leadership are inconceivable.

The plain truth is that America can no longer afford this sort of reckless partisanship on the part of the chief executive. The fact that Obama disagrees with Rep. Ryan's budget plan does not justify accusations of killing sick children or tossing old folks out on the street. That kind of rhetoric may pass for wit in the sixth grade, but it is juvenile coming from the President.

LIBERAL FASCISM, Marxism, National Socialism [NAZI] and Juche [N.Korea] are left-wing brothers:

http://www.youtube.com/watch?v=Fa1sj0gwnuQ

"It is obvious what the fraudulent issue of fascism versus communism accomplishes: it sets up, as opposites, two variants of the same political system; it eliminates the possibility of considering capitalism; it switches the choice of “Freedom or dictatorship?” into “Which kind of dictatorship?”—thus establishing dictatorship as an inevitable fact and offering only a choice of rulers. The choice—according to the proponents of that fraud—is: a dictatorship of the rich (fascism) or a dictatorship of the poor (communism)."

"That fraud collapsed in the 1940’s, in the aftermath of World War II. It is too obvious, too easily demonstrable that fascism and communism are not two opposites, but two rival gangs fighting over the same territory—that both are variants of statism, based on the collectivist principle that man is the rightless slave of the state—that both are socialistic, in theory, in practice, and in the explicit statements of their leaders—that under both systems, the poor are enslaved and the rich are expropriated in favor of a ruling clique—that fascism is not the product of the political “right,” but of the “left”—that the basic issue is not “rich versus poor,” but man versus the state, or: individual rights versus totalitarian government—which means: capitalism versus socialism."

"Just as the Left was drawn to the communist killing machines of Lenin, Stalin, Mao, Pol Pot, and Castro, so too it is now attracted to radical Islam."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

The origins of the modern left can be traced back to the famous passage in Rousseau’s Discourse on the Origin and Foundations of Inequality, in which he condemned the institution of private property:

“The first man, who after enclosing a piece of ground, took it into his head to say, ‘this is mine,’ and found people simple enough to believe him, was the real founder of civil society.”

Added Rousseau: “How many crimes, how many wars, how many murders, how many misfortunes and horrors, would that man have saved the human species, who pulling up the stakes or filling up the ditches should have cried to his fellows: Beware of listening to this impostor; you are lost, if you forget that the fruits of the earth belong equally to us all, and the earth itself to nobody!”

Around the 1830s, a faction of French liberals gravitated toward Romanticism and the philosophy of the late Rousseau, proclaiming that capitalism, private property, and the increasing complexity of modern society were agents of moral decay -- both for the individual and for society at large. This is essentially the worldview that has made its way, through history, into the collective mind of the modern left; it is a worldview calling for a revolution that not only will topple the existing capitalist order and punish its corrupt leaders, but that also will replace that order with a socialist regime where the utopian ideals of perfect justice and equality will reign. Such an ambition can be put into effect only by a totalitarian state with the authority to micromanage every facet of human life, precisely the end-point toward which the policies and crusades of the modern left are directed.

When the term “liberalism” (from the Latin word liberalis, meaning “pertaining to a free man”) first emerged in the early 1800s, its hallmarks were a belief in individual rights, the rule of law, limited government, private property, and laissez faire economics. These would remain the defining characteristics of liberalism throughout the liberal epoch (generally identified as the period of 1815-1914). Yet the modern left, which portrays itself as the agent of enlightened commitment to “liberal” causes, in fact stands for the antithesis of each of the foregoing liberal ideals. Contrary to its self-definition, the left is neither “liberal” nor “progressive,” but rather a reactionary force that seeks to resurrect the traditions that characterized the epoch which preceded the rise of classical liberalism.

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed

Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent.

The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

Chapter 1: Financing the 1933 Elections
On the cold winter weekend of January 28, 1933, Germany was officially without a government. Chancellor Kurt von Schleicher and his cabinet had resigned on Saturday afternoon, and eighty-six-year-old President von Hindenburg had not yet appointed a new chancellor. A nervous tension spread over Berlin. Everyone waited for news; most felt Germany was at an historic turning point.
Who would be the next chancellor? Hitler - the leader of the largest party, the Nazis, who pledged to destroy democracy? Papen - the aristocratic horseman who had been chancellor before Schleicher, but who had no popular following? Perhaps Schleicher again, if he could persuade the Social Democrats, the second largest political party in the country, to join him in a coalition? Governing Germany in the middle of an economic depression with nine million unemployed was not an enviable task. The country had just had three different chancellors in rapid succession. By tradition, the leader of the largest party was usually appointed chancellor. But the Nazis had been the largest party for over a year, and so far intrigues and political maneuvering had succeeded in keeping Hitler out of power. Everyone guessed what a Hitler government would mean. He had not kept his militarism, anti-Semitism, and dictatorial ambitions a secret.
Political intrigues were so numerous that weekend that no one really knew what was going on. Sensational rumors were being spread throughout the city. Some said an army coup was imminent, that Schleicher and the generals were about to abduct President von Hindenburg and declare martial law. There were also rumors of an armed Nazi uprising and a general strike by the socialist workers.
Hitler and Hermann Goering, the second most powerful man in the Nazi party, stayed up all night on Sunday, January 29, trying to figure out what Hindenburg might do. It was not until after 10 A.M. on Monday that Hitler received a summons to the president's office. Even at that point, the Nazis were not certain whether Hitler would be appointed chancellor or Hindenburg would ask him to serve as vice-chancellor.

Across the street from the Chancellery, in the Kaiserhof Hotel, Hitler's lieutenants were waiting, unsure of what was going on. Goebbels, the Nazi propaganda chief, said:

In the street the crowd stands waiting between the Kaiserhof and the Chancellery. We are torn between doubt, hope, joy and despair. We have been deceived too often to be able, wholeheartedly, to believe in the great miracle. [S.A.] Chief of Staff Roehm stands at the window (with binoculars) watching the door of the Chancellery from which the Fuehrer [the leader, Hitler] must emerge. We shall be able to judge by his face if the interview was a success. Torturing hours of waiting.
At last, a car draws up in front of the entrance. The crowd cheers. They seem to feel that a great change is taking place....
A few moments later, he is with us. He says nothing. His eyes are full of tears. It has come! The Fuehrer is appointed Chancellor. He has already been sworn in by the President of the Reich. All of us are dumb with emotion. Everyone clasps the Fuehrer's hand....Outside the Kaiserhof, the masses are in a wild uproar....The thousands soon become tens of thousands. Endless streams of people flood the Wilhelmstrasse. We set to work...at once.
Hitler's victory was not a complete one by any means. He had been appointed chancellor in a coalition government. Papen was to be his vice-chancellor, and all the powerful cabinet posts were held by Papen's conservative allies, rather than the Nazis. But at the moment, Hitler's followers weren't worried about the details; for them the only thing that mattered was that Hitler was chancellor. They had come to power! All day, crowds gathered in the square outside the Kaiserhof Hotel and the Chancellery.
At dusk Nazi storm troopers in their brown uniforms gathered in the Tiergarten park, along with men of the Stahlhelm, an ultranationalistic veterans' organization, for a torchlight victory parade through the center of Berlin. As soon as it was dark, they came marching by the thousands through the Brandenburg Gate, carrying swastika flags and the black, white, and red flags of the German empire. Bands marched between the units, beating their big drums as the men sang old German military songs. But as each band came to the Pariser Platz, where the French embassy was located, they stopped whatever they were playing and, with an introductory roll of drums, broke into the tune of the challenging war song "Victorious We Will Crush the French."
The torches carried by the marchers glowed hypnotically in the darkness. To foreign witnesses, it was a frightening sight. "The river of fire flowed past the French Embassy," Ambassador François-Poncet wrote, "whence, with heavy heart and filled with foreboding, I watched this luminous wake." Liberal Germans found it an "ominous sight." It was, wrote one German reporter, "a night of deadly menace, a nightmare in...blazing torches."
As the marchers came by the Chancellery, there were tumultuous cheers for Hitler, who stood in an open window saluting them. He was so excited that night, he could hardly stand still. He was raising his arm up and down heiling, smiling, and laughing so much, his eyes filled with tears. "It was an extraordinary experience," recalled Papen, who was standing behind Hitler. "The endless repetition of the triumphal cry: 'Heil, Heil, Sieg Heil!' rang in my ears like a tocsin." When Hitler turned to speak with Papen, his voice choked with emotion. "What an immense task we have set for ourselves, Herr von Papen - we must never part until our work is accomplished." Hitler and Papen were much closer allies than anyone at the time imagined.

It was after midnight when the parade ended. Being too excited to sleep, Hitler, Goering, Goebbels, and a few other Nazis sat up talking for hours. They could hardly believe it had actually happened: they were in the Chancellery at last. That evening, Hitler said to Goebbels, "No one gets me out of here alive." It was one of the few promises he kept.

On the morning of January 31, Hitler's storm troopers gave the German people a glimpse of what Nazi rule would be like. All over Germany, thugs in brown shirts took possession of the streets and roughed up Communists, socialists, and Jews; they chased socialist mayors and officials out of government buildings and even broke into the private homes of their political enemies. When people complained to Papen, he laughed. "Let the storm troopers have their fling." Among his friends at the Herrenklub, an exclusive gentlemens club, he boasted: "We've hired Hitler." To a skeptic he replied: "What do you want? I have Hindenburg's confidence. Within two months we will have pushed Hitler so far in the corner that he'll squeak."

The facts seemed to support Papen's optimism. Not only did Papen have Hindenburg"s confidence, but in fact the old president had promised never to receive Hitler unless he was accompanied by his vice-chancellor. Papen also held the important post of minister-president of Prussia, Germany's largest and most powerful state. From the composition of the cabinet, it seemed all the real power was in the hands of the conservatives: the aristocratic General von Blomberg was minister of defense, Baron von Neurath, a career diplomat, was foreign minister, and the old archreactionary Hugenberg was both minister of economics and minister of agriculture. The Nazis were outnumbered six to two.

The two Nazis in the cabinet, Wilhelm Frick and Goering, held posts that were thought to be insignificant. Frick was minister of the interior, but he did not control the police, which in Germany was under the jurisdiction of the individual state governments. Goering was made minister without portfolio, but with the promise that he would be minister of aviation as soon as Germany had an air force. He was also named minister of the interior of Prussia, an office that did not receive much notice by the public but did control the Prussian police.

The aristocrats and gentlemen of the Right who made up the majority of Hitler's cabinet hated the concept of democracy even more than the Nazis did. These men belonged to the old ruling class of the kaiser's Germany. They wanted to regain their old position of supremacy, lost in 1918. They wanted to restore the monarchy, suppress the socialist unions, avenge the loss of World War I, and make Germany the dominant power in Europe. It was obvious why such reactionary nationalists helped put Hitler in power: their goals and his were very similar.

Few people knew the full extent of Papen's collaboration with Hitler. Historians have said he "did more than anyone else outside the Nazi party to help Hitler to power." Papen helped Hitler because he was trying to control him and use the Nazis for his own aims.
Papen was a handsome aristocratic-looking man with distinguished gray hair and an officer's mustache. From an impoverished family of the Westphalian nobility, he became a General Staff officer, a skillful horseman, and a man of great charm. After a successful marriage to the daughter of a wealthy Saar industrialist, he bought a large block of shares in the Center party's newspaper, Germania. For a short time in 1932, Papen was chancellor, but his government had no popular support.
Papen believed it would be rather easy for an aristocratic officer like himself to manipulate a former corporal, like Hitler, and thus be able to use the Nazi's mass following to accomplish the aims of the upper-class conservative nationalists.
Hitler immediately began to outmaneuver his conservative colleagues. He reported to the cabinet that the Center party was making impossible demands and could not be counted on to form a coalition with the Nazis and the Nationalists that would have a majority in the Reichstag. Because of this situation, Hitler argued he would have to call for new elections. The only "demand" the Center party made was that Hitler promise to govern constitutionally, but none of the other members of the cabinet bothered to check Hitler's statement. They agreed to new elections on the condition that Hitler promise that the composition of the cabinet would not change regardless of the outcome of the voting.
New elections would provide Hitler with a chance to improve on the poor results the Nazis had received at the polls the past November. If the Nazis won a clear majority in the elections, they might be able to get rid of their coalition partners. Hitler had every reason to believe the election campaign would be a big success. The entire machinery of government, including the radio, was now under Nazi control and could be used for campaigning. The party had been flooded with new applicants for membership since he had become chancellor. In the cabinet meeting on February 2, Hitler discussed his preparations for the elections. Wilhelm Frick, the Nazi minister of the interior, proposed that the government set aside a million marks for the election campaign. Count von Schwerin von Krosigk, the minister of finance, rejected this suggestion. Hitler did not force the issue. He would have to get the money elsewhere.
The theme of the Nazi election campaign was to be the fight against communism. Hitler opened the attack in a late-night radio broadcast to the nation on February 1. He blamed the hard times Germany had gone through since 1918 on the Social Democrats, which had been the largest party in the Reichstag during most of those years. The Social Democrats, he reminded his listeners, were actually a Marxist party. "Fourteen years of Marxism," he said, "have ruined Germany; one year of bolshevism [communism] would destroy her. The richest and fairest territories of the world would be turned into a smoking heap of ruins. Even the sufferings of the last decade and a half could not be compared to the misery of a Europe in the heart of which the red flag of destruction has been hoisted." He went on to promise to put the unemployed back to work and save the peasants from bankruptcy.

On his fourth day in office, just after opening the election campaign, Hitler took time off to attend a very important dinner. He had been invited to the home of General von Hammerstein, chief of staff of the army, to meet the leading officers of the army and navy. In a speech that lasted almost two hours, Hitler explained his plans for rebuilding German military power.
The generals were the real power in Germany during the Weimar period. After World War II, many Germans tried to cover up the role certain members of the Officer Corps had played in helping to put Hitler in power. Many historians naively accepted this view, but the real story is quite different. Traditionally, the German Army ruled from behind the scenes and had the final "power to veto" any important issue. After the loss of World War I, the Versailles Treaty severely restricted the size of the German Army. The only way the generals could maintain mass training and develop new weapons was to finance private paramilitary units, like the Free Corps, with secret army funds.
Hitler not only began his career as an army agent, but even in the 1930s he was supported by a powerful faction in the army. Over several years, General von Schleicher, who was in charge of a secret informal political department of the army, funneled over ten million marks to Hitler. Why? Many military officers wanted an authoritarian government that could unify the nation. The people needed to be infused with a new spirit of patriotism because powerful interests were planning a war of revenge against the Allies. Naturally there was a division of opinion among the generals as to how much power to give Hitler. Hindenburg originally had strong reservations about appointing a man from a lower-class background, like Hitler, chancellor. However, the aggressive action the Nazis took against Communists was admired by Hindenburg, and his relationship with Hitler rapidly improved.
One day, Hindenburg summoned Hitler when Papen was away from Berlin. Hitler informed the president that Papen was out of town and reminded him of the rule he (Hindenburg) had made, that the chancellor could visit him only when accompanied by the vice-chancellor. "The old gentleman [Hindenburg]," said Hitler, "replied that he wished to see me alone, and that in the future the presence of Papen could be regarded as unnecessary. Within three weeks, he had progressed so far that his attitude towards me became affectionate and paternal. Talking of the elections fixed for the 3rd of March, he said, 'What are we going to do if you fail to get a majority? We shall have the same difficulties all over again.'"

At the beginning of the election campaign, Hitler and Papen persuaded old President von Hindenburg to sign an emergency decree to protect law and order. The decree gave Nazi officials the right to prohibit public meetings. Newspapers could be suppressed if they "incited" civil disobedience or published "false" reports.

Cripple Beats Up Airport Security Guards

By Mike Litoris MLitoris~jertschub.net MikeLitoris.com Monday, March 18, 2012

As Related To Me By Robert Schuh

Charges were dropped yesterday against Robert "Bert" Schuh, an whithered, 50-year-old wheelchair-bound former bodybuilder, who was originally charged with assault and battery, and assault with a deadly weapon, because an altercation he had last week with six airport security guards, that left all six hospitalized.

"Justice has been served," said the 95-pound ex-con, as he sat in his wheelchair, aided in his breathing by an oxygen bottle. "Now I'm going to sue every choad skin in the federal government for ignorance, stupidity, and just plain general incompetence. I'm welfare-receiving American, a libertarian and I won't be treated like this."

The problem began last month as Schuh was attempting to board an airplane. "These guys are supposed to be highly- trained professionals," he said, "but they're dumber than the AOL users. Here they were letting guys who looked just like terrorists walk through without searching them, and then they pull me aside and tell me they?re going to search me? I don't think so."

According to one witness, Mike Oxbig of Lansing, Michigan, one guard, "who weighed about 300 pounds, looked like he was drunk, and had his shirt out, told this guy he couldn't board the plane unless they searched him. He was really rude. That's when the trouble started."

Videotapes showed that Shuh ran the guard down with his motorized wheelchair, then sat on top of the screaming man while spinning his chair in circles. "Meat-head was so fat he couldn't get up," said Schuh with a wheeze.

One guard who attempted to pull Schuh's wheelchair off of the screaming man from behind was hit over the head with an oxygen bottle and knocked unconscious. A third guard, who approached Schuh from the front, was also left dazed on the floor. Witnesses said he was croaking, "Put your hands on a cripple, will you?" as he bashed both guards.

The tape also showed a fourth guard attempting to grab Schuh's wheelchair. Schuh removed a Sustanon 250 pre-loaded needle from his fanny pack and stabbed him in his left buttock. "What a pussy," he told reporters. "He started screaming and grabbing his butt and running like a puppy that someone kicked."

"It was amazing," said another witness, a Peter Rising. "The whole crowd just stood there cheering and clapping. I mean, he was whupping butt."

A fifth guard that attempted to grab Schuh had the seat of his pants set on fire with a cigarette lighter than had escaped detection. "He just went whoosh across the concourse, screaming and slapping at all these flames flying out of his rear," said Rising.

A sixth guard did finally manage to get Schuh in a body hug. "I think that was the wrong thing to do," said another witness, who declined to be identified. "He just grabbed him by his greasy hair with one hand and cracked him across the jaw with his skinny fist. And down and out he went."

After all this, Schuh's chair was still sitting on top of the first guard. The tapes clearly showed him leaning over and yelling, "Apologize to me, you fat sumbitch, choad skin or when I'm done with you you'll just be a greasy spot on the floor!"

As the crowd roared, the guard cried, "I'm sorry, I'm sorry! Uncle! I won't do it again!"

Finally, Schuh surrendered without further incident, and was taken to jail and released on his own recognizance. "We didn't have any choice," said an unidentified officer of the court. "Over 200 people showed up to support him. I think if we had demanded bail, there would have been a riot."

Over 20 lawyers offered to defend him for free. However, realizing the precariousness of the case, Schuh was not charged with anything. "I doubt there's a jury in the whole country that would have found him guilty of anything," said one of the lawyers.

"I'm flying again tomorrow," Schuh told reporters. "And I suggest no one at the airport so much as look at me wrong."

The young politician who was in favour of a minimum wage, a national insurance scheme, and old age pensions? That Winston Churchill?

By the way, 'Liberal Fascism' does not exist. Jonah Goldberg can't read an academic article about H.G. Wells properly!

Hypocrisy is part of the human condition. Less than laudable. But hardly uncommon, or remarkable. The real question might be whether or not Telamon offered relevant content to any of the discussions, here. Or whether he was engaging. Or personable. Or, in some other intangible way, brought more to the group than just characters on the screen.

Personally, I miss his presence here.

I have a Sony CRF-5090 Earth Orbiter. The thing sounds fantastic, and on the bands that work (FM/AIR/SW3,4,5) it's very VERY sensitive and has better than average selectivity. The problem is, it doesn't work on LW/MW/SW1. I've tracked it down to the oscillator being dead on those bands. What I can't seem to track down is why. I've got the service manual, and the schematic is no problem to read, but the actual switches not so much. At least one of them seems not to connect to anything at all. Has anyone ever had this sort of problem with this radio and can help me figure out what's going on?

TIA

I have no experience with that set, but about 60 per cent. of the time, a capacitor is at fault in older radios that have stopped working. It shouldn't be difficult to replace every capacitor that is only in the oscillator circuit on those bands. Another thing to try is to check continuity of all visible band switch contacts, even if you don't know how they're wired.

Best of luck,

Kevin, WB4AIO.

That sounds like a toughie. I had an RCA CRT tee vee set I bought new in October nineteen nienty nine. A few years ago whenever I tried to turn it on, it would make a bump noise but no picture, no nothing. When I moved that tee vee set I saw some stuff under there as though some gooey stuff had leaked out. Maybe some capacitors had leaked? I gave that tee vee set to the Goodwill store.

THIS WEEK I want to give a special thanks to all those of you who have contributed to the discussions on the Liberty Net over these many years ï¿½ both those of you who have been on the net for decades, and the many new check-ins weï¿½ve welcomed in recent months ï¿½ both those who talk to us over the air, and those who offer their views via our chat rooms or via email, letter, or telephone calls. All of you are what make the Liberty Net what it is.

Here are some of the ideas brought to light during this weekï¿½s Liberty Net:

ï¿½ Why can Eric Holder and those under him openly commit criminal acts ï¿½ as they did in the so-called ï¿½Fast and Furiousï¿½ gun-running program ï¿½ for which anyone else would be thrown in jail, and yet not even be charged? (8 minutes)

ï¿½ The banks in Europe just created the largest amount of money in any one day in history, though they called it an ï¿½injection of liquidity.ï¿½ Why is this momentous event not making headlines? Could an analysis of media ownership provide the answer? (9 minutes)

ï¿½ A new bill has been introduced, HR107, which states that if Obama, or any President, initiates any further military action without Congressional approval, such act will be considered an impeachable offense. (25 minutes)

ï¿½ In the Third World satrapy that is still called Detroit, the Department of Human Services is so terminally corrupt that it has actually been shut down. It is estimated that, of the $72 million that American taxpayers gave ï¿½ gave! ï¿½ to that sink pit in one year alone, some $55 million is acknowledged to be missing. (30 minutes)

ï¿½ In one of the regimeï¿½s courthouses in Washington, DC, a portrait honoring violent anti-White terrorist and Communist Party leader Angela Davis has been put on display, along with a legend stating that Davis ï¿½paved the way for political greatnessï¿½ for Black people. (34 minutes)

ï¿½ ï¿½White flightï¿½ from cities ravaged by Third World invasions and birth rates has, in some areas, collided with those fleeing from cities in the opposite direction. In other words, we now have nowhere further to retreat. (44 minutes)

ï¿½ In Morocco, there is a civil law which allows a man who rapes a minor to escape prosecution if he agrees to marry his victim. Recently, one such young victim committed suicide after being beaten by her new ï¿½husband,ï¿½ sparking protests. Are you sure that multiculturalism is such a good idea now? Morocco, by the way, is one of the Washington regimeï¿½s noble ï¿½allies.ï¿½ (50 minutes)

ï¿½ Ad agencies, criminals, and Facebook itself are now using sophisticated software to harvest and collate your images and personal information from that social networking site. It is wise not to use your real name, location, birth date, or other identifiable information if you decide to use that service. Facebook is also well known for deleting people who tell too much truth about political or racial matters, so backup accounts are _de rigueur_. (55 minutes)

ï¿½ According to CIA Director David Petraeus, some televisions, smart phones, and home appliances are now being wired to allow surreptitious surveillance of your home. (1 hour 18 minutes)

ï¿½ The "Kony 2012" video that garnered millions of views on YouTube, and which was agitating Americans to support military intervention in sub-Saharan Africa, has now been revealed to be a hoax. (1 hour 55 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to these Liberty Net recordings at home, at work, in your car, or while hiking or jogging with your portable mp3 player. And remember the live feeds during Net times, right here at http://3950.net/live/ and at N2SAGï¿½s site, that let you hear the Liberty Net via multiple receivers ï¿½ and chat too.

Check out, and check in to, amateur radioï¿½s most exciting net every Saturday night ï¿½ usually somewhere above 3950 kHz SSB (we have to be flexible to evade jammers and intruders), starting at 10PM Eastern Time.

Kudos and thanks go to Vic, W1WCR, for his decades of hard work for free speech and amateur radio!

You are correct: No contesting allowed on the WARC bands...but he did NOT say that the 12 meter station was in the contest.

No contest stations would be on the WARC bands because when you sent your log in the log checkers would bounce it a mile high. To say nothing of the fact that 99.99999999% of the hams know there is no contesting allowed on the WARC bands and would not be trying to run the contest on those bands in the first place.

VHF, not UHF (last time you told the story, anyway). UHF came with Like always - it's at 10pm Eastern Time and the frequency should be 3950 kilocyces LSB .. should be .. but I think 3950 has been hijacked by agents of the Obama administration who don't want the truth known.

And they know that The Great Liberty Nit-Wit-Net has access to truth from the top.

Highlights of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
19 - 25 March 2012

Solar activity has been at low to moderate levels for the past seven days. The largest event of the period was a M1 x-ray event on 23 March at 1940 UTC from Region 1445 (S24, L=026, class/area Fho/280 on 25 March). Region 1445 rotated onto the southeast limb of the solar disk late on 23 March and has since dominated in solar activity, producing multiple C-class x-ray events. Region 1444 (N19, L=067, class/area Cao/060 on 25 March) emerged on 23 March and has also been active, producing multiple C-class x-ray events. Both Regions, 1445 and 1444, produced CMEs on 25 March, however very little effect is expected here at Earth. The remaining regions on the solar disk remained rather quiet and stable.

No proton events were observed at geosynchronous orbit during the summary period.

The greater than 2 MeV electron flux at geosynchronous orbit was at predominantly high levels for the duration of the summary period. However, on 23 and 25 March, moderate levels were observed.

The geomagnetic field ranged from quiet to active levels with an isolated period at minor storm levels at high latitudes. On 19 March, predominantly quiet levels were observed with an isolated active period measured early in the day, in response to the arrival of a CME from 15 March. Quiet conditions prevailed from 20 March to late on 22 March, when a solar sector boundary (SSB) crossing was measured by the ACE spacecraft. Following the SSB, quiet to unsettled levels were seen from 22 - 23 March. On 24 March, active levels with an isolated minor storm period was observed as a small coronal hole high speed stream (CH HSS) moved into a geoeffective position. This CH HSS was short lived with measurements by the ACE spacecraft indicating a quick rise in solar wind speeds to around 500 km/s followed by a quick decrease to nominal background levels. On 25 March, activity returned to quiet levels.

Note: There is a gap in data from the GOES 15 spacecraft from late on 21 March through mid 23 March. This gap can be seen in the GOES 15 x-ray plot.

Forecast of Solar and Geomagnetic Activity
26 March - 21 April 2012

Solar activity is expected to be at low to moderate levels. Predominantly low levels are expected from 26 - 28 March, when old Region 1429 rotates back onto the northeast limb. M-class flare probabilities are expected to increase from 28 March - 11 April as old Region 1429 progresses across the solar disk. A return to low levels is expected to prevail for the remainder of the period, 12 - 21 April.

No proton events are forecast from 26 - 30 March. An increase to a slight chance for proton events is forecast from 31 March - 11 April as old Region 1429 populates the visible disk. A return to background proton flux levels is expected from 12 April - 21 April.

Electrons, greater than 2 MeV, are expected to be at normal to moderate levels from 26 - 28 March. From 29 March - 03 April, moderate to high levels are expected. From 04 - 13 April, a return to normal to moderate levels is expected. Moderate to high levels are expected from 14 - 18 April. A return to normal levels is expected for the remainder of the period.

The geomagnetic field is expected to be at mostly quiet levels from 26 - 27 March. Quiet to active levels are expected from 28 -29 March in response to the effects of a CH HSS. Predominantly quiet levels are expected from 30 March - 12 April. An increase to quiet to active levels is expected from 13 - 14 April in response to a CH HSS. Quiet levels are expected to prevail for the remainder of the period.

Ten to 15 Minutes 2~3 Times a Day is usually

How 'Hard' to Work-Out ? : At the end of a 10~15 Minute Work-Out; You should have Beads of Sweat on your Forehead.

Note : The same 'level' of Work-Out as a Saturday is the day for The Great Liberty Nit-Wit-Net Preppers ...

You go to Sam's Club and stock up on ice cream and choc'lit chip cookies and co-colas.

On March 24 group 1441 disappeared, and on March 25 new group 1446 emerged. On March 26, groups 1440, 1443 and 1446 faded away, but 1442 - not seen since four days earlier - re-emerged. On March 27 group 1444 disappeared and 1447 appeared, and on March 28 new group 1448 arrived.

For the short term, planetary A index is predicted to be 5 on March 30 through April 9, then 12 on April 10, and back to 5 on April 11-12, then 15 and 10 on April 13-14, followed by 5 on April 15-23. A similar pattern appears way out in May, when planetary A index is predicted at 12 on May 7, then 15 again on May 10. It's a good guess that this is probably based on the rotation of the Sun relative to Earth, predicting that an active magnetic area could appear again 27-28 days later.

The solar flux prediction shows flux values of 120, 130 and 135 on March 30 through April 1, then 140 on April 2-6. On April 7-11 the predicted solar flux is 130, 125, 120, 110 and 105. On April 12-15 the predicted solar flux is 100. It then goes to 105 and 110 on April 16-17, and back to 100 on April 18-21, then 105 on April 22-23, 110 on April 24-25, 120, 125, and 130 on April 26-28, and 135 on April 29-30. Another peak at 140 is predicted for May 1-3.

"Q-up Now" has a fascinating new set of real-time propagation tools at http://www.q-upnow.com/, developed by a team associated with the Utah State University Space Weather Center

(http://spaceweather.usu.edu/) in Logan, Utah.

They use a real-time model of the ionosphere called GAIM (Global Assimilation of Ionospheric Measurements) which is updated every 15 minutes with 10,000 global TEC (Total Electron Content) measurements to simulate the F layers. Then they use the ABBYNormal Model (see http://gcmd.nasa.gov/records/abbyNormal.html) to model the D and E layers, and the two models are combined to give a complete representation of the global ionosphere.

On the first page you will see NVIS maps for Near Vertical Incidence Skywave propagation. These are not quite ready yet, and currently the maps shown are several days old.

Most interesting is the HF Availability (http://www.q-upnow.com/hf-availability) area in which you can model real-time propagation for the frequency of your choice between any two points and beyond out to the antipodes. You can use latitude/longitude coordinates, but I found it easiest to just copy grid square data from callsign servers such as http://www.qrz.com.

This tool also works on 160 meters, which the propagation prediction programs that many of us use do not. Of course the major difference with this tool is that it tells you what the propagation should be over any path right now, but they are planning on offering a predictive tool.

Have fun!

At that time I was driving from my home QTH (Saltillo, MX grid DL95ml) to work and all that time the signal was very strong. I also managed to transmit an APRS Packet with no problem (Saltillo has no IGate or digi) you can look it up on http://www.aprs.fi (Call: K5TOR-9). I have no idea what propagation that was as it was at least 30min and there was hardly any fading."

Using the http://radio-locator.com/ site I searched for stations on 103.1 MHz in Texas. A likely candidate was KPAS FM, and the distance to Torsten's grid square from the transmitter site was 530 miles. Perhaps some solid E layer skip was helping it along that day.

Back to ObaMa0-care(less)

When a 1942 Supreme Court decision that most people never heard of makes the front page of the New York Times in 2012, you know that something unusual is going on.

What makes that 1942 case -- Wickard v. Filburn -- important today is that it stretched the federal government's power so far that the ObaMa0 administration is using it as an argument to claim before today's Supreme Court that it has the legal authority to impose ObaMa0Care(less) mandates on individuals.

Yet another Useful Liberal Fascist JackAss Idiot parroting twisted Communist Party propaganda lies.

Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg likes the Indian Healthcare Improvement Act and other ingredients of the Patient Protection and Affordable Care Act, aka "ObamaCare." Why, she asked toward the end of three days of hearings, shouldn't the court keep the good stuff in ObamaCare and just dump the unconstitutional bits?

The court, she explained, is presented with "a choice between a wrecking operation ... or a salvage job. And the more conservative approach would be salvage rather than throwing out everything."

"Conservative" is a funny word. It can mean lots of different things. It reminds me of that line from G.K. Chesterton about the word "good." "The word 'good' has many meanings," he observed. "For example, if a man were to shoot his grandmother at a range of 500 yards, I should call him a good shot, but not necessarily a good man."

Conservative can mean cautious in temperament -- a man who wears belts and suspenders. Similarly, it sometimes suggests someone who's averse to change. It can also refer to the political ideology or philosophy founded by Edmund Burke and popularized and Americanized by people like Barry Goldwater, Ronald Reagan, William F. Buckley and George Will. It can mean someone who is averse to change.

Things can get complicated because these different meanings can overlap. Many strident liberals can have conservative temperaments, and many philosophical conservatives can have private lives that make a brothel during Fleet Week seem like a retirement-home chess club. Conservatives in America love the free market, which is the greatest source of change in human history. Liberals, alleged lovers of change and "progress," often champion an agenda dedicated to preserving the past. Just consider how much of the Democratic Party's rhetoric is dedicated to preserving a policy regime implemented by Franklin Roosevelt nearly 80 years ago.

You can also be conservative with respect to a given institution while being un-conservative in every other respect. The most ardent Communists in the Chinese or Cuban politburos are often described as "conservatives." The same holds true for every left-wing institution in America: Someone has to be the "conservative" at PETA or Planned Parenthood -- i.e., the person who is risk-averse when it comes to scarce resources or the group's reputation.

Anyway, sometimes people like to play games with the indeterminacy of the word "conservative" in order to sell a liberal agenda

http://townhall.com/columnists/jonahgoldberg/2012/03/30/conservative_interpretations/page/full/

"It is obvious what the fraudulent issue of fascism versus communism accomplishes: it sets up, as opposites, two variants of the same political system; it eliminates the possibility of considering capitalism; it switches the choice of “Freedom or dictatorship?” into “Which kind of dictatorship?”—thus establishing dictatorship as an inevitable fact and offering only a choice of rulers. The choice—according to the proponents of that fraud—is: a dictatorship of the rich (fascism) or a dictatorship of the poor (communism)."

"That fraud collapsed in the 1940’s, in the aftermath of World War II. It is too obvious, too easily demonstrable that fascism and communism are not two opposites, but two rival gangs fighting over the same territory—that both are variants of statism, based on the collectivist principle that man is the rightless slave of the state—that both are socialistic, in theory, in practice, and in the explicit statements of their leaders—that under both systems, the poor are enslaved and the rich are expropriated in favor of a ruling clique—that fascism is not the product of the political “right,” but of the “left”—that the basic issue is not “rich versus poor,” but man versus the state, or: individual rights versus totalitarian government—which means: capitalism versus socialism."

"The contempt that German Hitlerytes had for "Bolshevism" or "marxist Jews" generally should also not mislead us in assessing the similarity between National Socialism and Communism. Leftist sects are very prone to rivalry, dissension, schism and hatred of one-another. One has only to think of the Bolsheviks versus the Mensheviks, Stalin versus Trotsky, China versus the Soviet Union etc. Similarity does not preclude rivalry. Hitler and Stalin were literally brothers in arms BEFORE they became rivals. That socialist brothers sometimes fall out should not prevent us from noting the brotherhood concerned."

"The fundamental dogma of all brands of socialism and communism is that the market economy or capitalism is a system that hurts the vital interests of the immense majority of people for the sole benefit of a small minority of rugged individualists. It condemns the masses to progressing impoverishment. It brings about misery, slavery, oppression, degradation and exploitation of the working men, while it enriches a class of idle and useless parasites."

"This doctrine was not the work of Karl Marx. It had been developed long before Marx entered the scene. Its most successful propagators were not the Marxian authors, but such men as Carlyle and Ruskin, the British Fabians, the German professors and the American Institutionalists. And it is a very significant fact that the correctness of this dogma was contested only by a few economists who were very soon silenced and barred from access to the universities, the press, the leadership of political parties and, first of all, public office. Public opinion by and large accepted the condemnation of capitalism without any reservation."

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - http://mises.org/midroad.asp

"The term 'planning' is mostly used as a synonym for socialism, communism, and authoritarian and totalitarian economic management. Sometimes only the German pattern of socialism-Zwangswirtschaft-is called planning, while the term socialism proper is reserved for the Russian pattern of outright socialization and bureaucratic operation of all plants, shops, and farms. At any rate, planning in this sense means all-around planning by the government and enforcement of these plans by the police power. Planning in this sense means full government control of business. It is the antithesis of free enterprise, private initiative, private ownership of the means of production, market economy, and the price system. Planning and capitalism are utterly incompatible. Within a system of planning production is conducted according to the government's orders, not according to the plans of capitalists and entrepreneurs eager to profit by best filling the wants of the consumers.

"But the term planning is also used in a second sense. Lord Keynes, Sir William Beveridge, Professor Hansen, and many other eminent men assert that they do not want to substitute totalitarian slavery for freedom. They declare that they are planing for a free society. They recommend a third system, which, as they say, is as far from socialism as it is from capitalism, which, as a third solution of the problem of society's economic organization, stands midway between the two other systems, and while retaining the advantages of both, avoids the disadvantages inherent in each.

"These self-styled progressives are certainly mistaken when they pretend that their proposals are new and unheard of. The idea of this third solution is very old indeed, and the French have long since baptized it with a pertinent name; they call it interventionism. Hardly anybody can doubt that history will link the idea of social security, more closely than with the American New Deal and with Sir William Beveridge, with the memory of Bismarck whom our fathers did not precisely describe as a liberal. All the essential ideas of present-day interventionist progressivism were neatly expounded by the supreme brain-trusters of imperial Germany, Professors Schmoller and Wagner, who at the same time urged their Kaiser to invade and to conquer the Americas. Far be it from me to condemn any idea only on account of its not being new. But as the progressives slander all their opponents as old-fashioned, orthodox, and reactionary, it is expedient to observe that it would be more appropriate to speak of the clash of two orthodoxies; the Bismarck orthodoxy versus the Jefferson orthodoxy.

Dr. Ludwig von Mises - 1952 - http://mises.org/books/planningforfreedom_mises.pdf

The origins of the modern left can be traced back to the famous passage in Rousseau's Discourse on the Origin and Foundations of Inequality, in which he condemned the institution of private property:

"The first man, who after enclosing a piece of ground, took it into his head to say, 'this is mine,' and found people simple enough to believe him, was the real founder of civil society."

Added Rousseau: "How many crimes, how many wars, how many murders, how many misfortunes and horrors, would that man have saved the human species, who pulling up the stakes or filling up the ditches should have cried to his fellows: Beware of listening to this impostor; you are lost, if you forget that the fruits of the earth belong equally to us all, and the earth itself to nobody!"

Around the 1830s, a faction of French liberals gravitated toward Romanticism and the philosophy of the late Rousseau, proclaiming that capitalism, private property, and the increasing complexity of modern society were agents of moral decay -- both for the individual and for society at large. This is essentially the worldview that has made its way, through history, into the collective mind of the modern left; it is a worldview calling for a revolution that not only will topple the existing capitalist order and punish its corrupt leaders, but that also will replace that order with a socialist regime where the utopian ideals of perfect justice and equality will reign. Such an ambition can be put into effect only by a totalitarian state with the authority to micromanage every facet of human life, precisely the end-point toward which the policies and crusades of the modern left are directed.

When the term "liberalism" (from the Latin word liberalis, meaning "pertaining to a free man") first emerged in the early 1800s, its hallmarks were a belief in individual rights, the rule of law, limited government, private property, and laissez faire economics. These would remain the defining characteristics of liberalism throughout the liberal epoch (generally identified as the period of 1815-1914). Yet the modern left, which portrays itself as the agent of enlightened commitment to “liberal” causes, in fact stands for the antithesis of each of the foregoing liberal ideals. Contrary to its self-definition, the left is neither “liberal” nor “progressive,” but rather a reactionary force that seeks to resurrect the traditions that characterized the epoch which preceded the rise of classical liberalism.

A New America www.NewAmericaMovie.com is a documentary film that outlines the history of the Progressive movement in America over the last century. It analyzes how Progressive ideology has transformed public policy, the structures of government, and its potential impact on the country’s future. An example of historical analysis contained in the film would be the argument that the Progressive ideals employed by FDR’s New Deal were the cause of the Great Depression, not the solution to it.

Through interviews with Constitutional scholars, authors, historians, public policymakers, and others, it reviews the original intent of the Founders, why it is important and lays out how Progressivism is in conflict with that original intent.

As socialistworker.org admits, http://socialistworker.org/2003-2/471/471_09_Fascism.shtml the left routinely applies the term "fascist" to any Republican political leader. In Britain The Guardian, BBC, and other liberal media pounced on purported links between the Bush family and corporations that had dealings with Nazi Germany. The fact that Prescott Bush, George W. Bush's grandfather, was a "director and shareholder" with companies that had indirect financial dealings with Germany in the 1930s would hardly seem damning, however. Much the same could be said for many other affluent individuals in America or Britain at the time. Every American today with mutual fund holdings is invested, at least indirectly, in Hugo Chavez's Venezuela. Does that make them Marxist revolutionaries?

Talk of Hitler became a lot more common during the Bush years, when it was accepted wisdom on the left that George Bush was worse than Hitler. Then there was Nancy Pelosi, who spent weeks back in 2010 complaining of the Tea Party's so-called "swastika signs" -- signs that did not signal an alliance with fascism but opposition to it. Pelosi was hardly alone in accusing the Tea Party of fascism. Marc Rubin, writing for examiner.com, referred to Tea Party members as "text book fascists." He went on to pin the neo-fascist label on Tom Tancredo, presumably because of Tancredo's concerns over illegal immigration. If those concerns make Tancredo a fascist, they would make the majority of Americans who share those concerns fascists as well. But that's pretty much how the left sees America.

The immediate response of liberals such as Chris Matthews http://www.mrc.org/biasalert/2011/20110412110017.aspx to the Ryan "Path to Prosperity" was to characterize it as a killer not just of babies and old people but of "half the people who watch this show." This attempt to portray the GOP plan as genocidal is just another example of the fascist rhetoric. It appears that Matthews is attempting to portray the Ryan plan as some sort of Final Solution.

It's not just loose cannons on MSNBC who resort to fascist innuendo. Obama's speechwriters are good at crafting sinister suggestions even without using the "F" word. Obama's budget speech of April 13 actually set the tone for the current debate. With Rep. Ryan sitting on the front row, Obama lectured his audience that the GOP plan would kick "someone's grandparents" out of nursing homes and cause children with autism and Down's syndrome to "fend for themselves." It is well known that Hitler sent legions of the disabled to concentration camps to be gassed, but the suggestion that a plan to actually save Medicare and Medicaid resembles the Holocaust, if that is what Obama intended, is repellent. It was one more proof, as if we needed any more, of a fatal weakness in the character of this President. He is a man whose entire existence is devoted to gutter politics. For such a man, statesmanship and dignified leadership are inconceivable.

The plain truth is that America can no longer afford this sort of reckless partisanship on the part of the chief executive. The fact that Obama disagrees with Rep. Ryan's budget plan does not justify accusations of killing sick children or tossing old folks out on the street. That kind of rhetoric may pass for wit in the sixth grade, but it is juvenile coming from the President.

"It is obvious what the fraudulent issue of fascism versus communism accomplishes: it sets up, as opposites, two variants of the same political system; it eliminates the possibility of considering capitalism; it switches the choice of “Freedom or dictatorship?” into “Which kind of dictatorship?”—thus establishing dictatorship as an inevitable fact and offering only a choice of rulers. The choice—according to the proponents of that fraud—is: a dictatorship of the rich (fascism) or a dictatorship of the poor (communism)."

"That fraud collapsed in the 1940’s, in the aftermath of World War II. It is too obvious, too easily demonstrable that fascism and communism are not two opposites, but two rival gangs fighting over the same territory—that both are variants of statism, based on the collectivist principle that man is the rightless slave of the state—that both are socialistic, in theory, in practice, and in the explicit statements of their leaders—that under both systems, the poor are enslaved and the rich are expropriated in favor of a ruling clique—that fascism is not the product of the political “right,” but of the “left”—that the basic issue is not “rich versus poor,” but man versus the state, or: individual rights versus totalitarian government—which means: capitalism versus socialism."

The following is from The World Book Encyclopedia, 1947 edition:
The chief characteristics of Fascism are as follows:

THE CULTIVATION OF IGNORANCE

Fascism, like all forms of government, rests firmly on the sincere consent of a large part of the population... To maintain this consent, the Fascist leadership must cut off the people from any information which might cause them to doubt the complete correctness of the fixed Fascist principles... All forms of communication are carefully censored, so that the public will receive only those facts that the dictators want known... Travel to other countries must be controlled, and freedom of speech and assembly must be rigorously suppressed...

THE POLICE STATE

Fascism depends upon the police to crush all opposition or dissent. Secret police spy on the whole population, and any casual remark against the regime leads to swift and severe punishment... Opposition parties are dissolved. Intellectual, athletic and recreational organizations are usually brought under the control of the Fascist authority... The ruthlessness of the police gradually becomes less noticeable... This is because within a year or so after a Fascist government takes power, vigorous opponents of the regime have either left the country, been killed or jailed...

EXTREME NATIONALISM

Fascism is highly nationalistic... It tries to identify its principles with the country, so that disagreement will look like treason... Some other country, or some group within the country, is chosen to serve as the "enemy" and made to appear as the cause of all evils or misfortunes... For example, the Nazis in Germany represented their movement first as a crusade against the Jews, then as a fight against Communism and later as a struggle against the "attacks" from whatever neighboring country they wished to subdue or occupy... Extreme nationalism often becomes a kind of racial fanaticism... Sometimes it combines racial and religious bigotry...

MILITARISM

Fascism maintains among the people a permanently warlike frame of mind... Every citizen feels that he is mobilized against enemies of the regime from within, and against possible foreign foes... The dictator usually comes to power during a period of economic crisis or depression... He relieves the depression partly by employing many people in the making of armaments... To justify this procedure, he must convince the people that the country is threatened, and must point toward some of the enemies against whom the armaments may be needed...

The Transatlantic Duel: HITLER vs. ROOSEVELT

In 1941 the President understood better than many Americans the man who was running Germany, and Hitler understood Roosevelt and his country better than we knew by John Lukacs

In the summer of 1940 the fate of the world depended on the duel between two men: Adolf Hitler and Winston Churchill. It was a duel of nerves, and of wills. Churchill carried it off, because Hitler finally chose not to invade Britain. But even before he made that decision, he and Churchill were aware that this was no longer a duel between the two of them. Before the fall of France, Hitler had gained an ally, Mussolini. Before the Battle of Britain Churchill had gained the support of Roosevelt. That the latter weighed more in the balance than the former both Hitler and Churchill knew.

There are coincidences and parallels in Hitler’s and Roosevelt’s careers. The thirtieth of January was a day of celebration for both of them; the day Hitler became chancellor of Germany (in 1933) was Roosevelt’s birthday. Then, in March 1933, they came to power just a day apart, Roosevelt’s inauguration coinciding with the Reichstag election that gave Hitler his majority. For twelve years they were the heads of two of the greatest states in the world. For the first six years of their respective leaderships their main achievements were domestic; they pulled their peoples from a great depression. For the next six years they were leaders in a war, bitter enemies. They died in April 1945, eighteen days apart, before the war ended, the war that Roosevelt won and Hitler lost. But their characters, their ideas, their temperaments, their world views could not have been more different.

It is wrong to think, as many do, that Hitler was ignorant of the United States. His interest in stories about the American West went back to his youth. Although he customarily read very few diplomatic documents, in 1940 and 1941 he was an assiduous peruser of reports from the German embassy in Washington, and he had a fairly accurate comprehension of American political divisions.

Franklin Roosevelt, who had visited Europe during his youth, knew more about Germany than had his predecessor Woodrow Wilson. He disliked certain traits of German character, but he wished to cultivate good relations with Germany even after Hitler had come to power. (That event was misinterpreted by most Americans. On the day Hitler was made chancellor the correspondent of The New York Times cabled from Berlin: “Herr Hitler is reported to be in a more docile frame of mind.” Next day: “Hitler Puts Aside Aim to Be Dictator”; “Hitler News Fails to Stir Wall Street.” The editorial: “Much of Hitler’s old electoral thunder has either been stolen from him, or has died down into a negligible rumble.” During the entire week thereafter none of the forty or fifty letters to the editor printed in The New York Times mentioned Germany or Hitler.)

A few years later there was a change. Most historians regard Roosevelt’s speech of October 5, 1937, the so-called Quarantine Speech in Chicago, as a turning point, the beginning of Roosevelt’s active interest in foreign policy and of his inclination to engage the United States against the aggressive dictators. The Quarantine Speech may have been a milestone; a turning point it was not. It was, as often was the case in Roosevelt’s foreign policy speeches, wrapped in Wilsonian generalities. The theme was the need of “peace-loving nations” to quarantine the “aggressors” and thereby isolate their “contagion.” Roosevelt made no mention of who the aggressors were. He may have read Mein Kampf by that time; yet the speech could be interpreted as aimed at Japan rather than at Germany. Of course, Hitler had a bad press in America by then. Yet as late as October 1938 Roosevelt congratulated Chamberlain for having reached a peaceful settlement with Hitler at Munich. But by the end of that year Roosevelt made certain moves—surreptitiously, as was his wont. He realized that in London and Paris there were political personages who were opposed to appeasing Hitler further. Clandestinely, confidentially, through personal intermediaries Roosevelt began to suggest that he approved of their cause. His principal intermediary at that time was his close friend and confidant Ambassador William C. BuIlitt in Paris.

Secret as these Rooseveltian suggestions were, Hitler knew of them. He was aware of Roosevelt’s inclination to support someone like Winston Churchill. From 1939 to the end of the war, Hitler saw the situation of the Western powers thus: behind Churchill was Roosevelt; and behind Roosevelt, the Jews. Because of this, Hitler’s speech on January 30, 1939, is of considerable significance, although it was overlooked at the time by a world that had grown accustomed to his fanatical rhetoric. “If the international Jewish financiers inside and outside Europe should again succeed in plunging the nations into a world war, the result… will be the annihilation of the Jewish race throughout Europe.” In other words, his enemies might bring about a world war. They are being incited by Jews. About Jews in America he could do nothing. But if there was a war, it would be “no laughing matter” (these were his words) for the Jews in Europe. He was as good—o.r, rather, as evil—as his word. In 1939 his policy was still to expel the Jews from Germany. In late 1941 that policy changed to extermination. The infamous Wannsee Conference that arranged for its policing and execution was set to meet in Berlin on the day of Pearl Harbor; then it was postponed until January. The news of Pearl Harbor lifted the hearts of millions of Jews around the world. It was also the death knell for millions of Jews in Europe, though none of them knew that.

But we are running ahead of our story, which is not a recapitulation of the war but a history of how Roosevelt and Hitler saw each other. In April 1939 Roosevelt proposed an international peace guarantee. It was ineffective as well as insubstantial. Hitler dismissed it publicly. When the Second World War broke out in September 1939 with Hitler's invasion of Poland, Roosevelt spoke to the American people: "This nation will remain a neutral nation, but I cannot ask that every American remain neutral in thought as well." Hitler understood what that meant. Well before Churchill became the prime minister of Britain (on May 10, 1940, the same day that Hitler launched his invasion of Western Europe), he and Roosevelt had conducted a secret correspondence. When Hitler learned this, he was not surprised. During the battles of Flanders and France, he knew where Roosevelt's heart lay. He also knew that Churchill's survival depended on an American engagement on Britain's side.

The British, Hitler said, had two hopes: America and Russia. Against America, he could do nothing.
On June 10, 1940, Roosevelt was on his way to the commencement ceremonies of the University of Virginia at Charlottesville. He had a foreign policy speech most of which had been prepared for him by the State Department. On the train to Charlottesville he added to its text. It was a very un-neutral speech, with statements such as this: "Some indeed still hold to the now obvious delusion that we of the United States can safely permit the United States to become a lone island, a lone island in a world dominated by the philosophy of force. Such an island may be the dream of those who still talk and vote as isolationists. Such an island represents to me and to the overwhelming majority of Americans today a helpless nightmare.… Let us not hesitate—all of us—to proclaim certain truths. Overwhelmingly we … are convinced that military and naval victory for the gods of force and hate would endanger the institutions of democracy in the Western World, and that equally, therefore, the whole of our sympathies lies with those nations that are giving their life blood in combat against these forces." On that day France was crumbling. The French government (and Churchill) were imploring Roosevelt to come into the war. But this he could not do. For such a commitment he would have neither Congress, nor the military, nor the American people behind him, and 1940 was an election year.

Hitler knew that in June 1940 there were many influential Americans who thought that Roosevelt's inclination to side with Britain was wrong. Now he would give them some political ammunition. Two days later, in his secret headquarters, a château on the BelgianFrench border, he received an American correspondent. That was very unusual. He seldom gave interviews, and surely not at his military headquarters. During that entire campaign he saw no journalists at all. But this man, Karl von Wiegand, the chief European correspondent of the Hearst (that is, anti-Roosevelt) paper the New York Journal-American, was brought to him by his foreign minister, Ribbentrop. Hitler talked to von Wiegand for two hours. Then he talked off the record. The next day, Hitler went through the text of the interview word by word (very unusual for him). What Hitler said was—or should have been—as impressive as it was convincing. He said that he wanted to reassure Americans. “Europe for the Europeans and America for the Americans.” He said that he did not wish to destroy the British Empire. He wanted peace. He did not say a word about Roosevelt, except for one remark off the record: he was pleased that Roosevelt, at Charlottesville, had not proposed armed participation. His comments reveal that Hitler understood much of the American political situation. In one instance he called the isolationists “American radical nationalists,” a much more precise and telling term than the former. He knew how much of their “isolationism” was selective. They were bitterly opposed to American intervention against National Socialist Germany; yet many of the same people eventually became advocates of American intervention against Communist Russia.

In one important way the von Wiegand interview caused little trouble for Roosevelt. It was overshadowed by the news of the fall of Paris on the day of its publication. In another sense it played a part in activating Roosevelt’s isolationist opposition. Charles Lindbergh and John Foster Dulles discussed it two days later in New York. America First was in the making. John Cudahy, Roosevelt’s ambassador to Belgium, was an isolationist; he took it upon himself to make sure that the text of the Hitler-von Wiegand interview was read by Pope Pius XII in Rome. It contributed to the decision of the Vatican to attempt a peace mediation later that month.

Hitler was well aware of American political divisions and also of the American electoral calendar. Immediately after the fall of France he was disappointed that the isolationists among the Republicans did not have their way; they could not prevent the nomination of Wendell Willkie. But he and Goebbels ordered the toning down of attacks on Roosevelt and on the United States in the German newspapers and radio. During the month of July Roosevelt’s decision to commit the United States on the side of Britain matured. Hitler was doing his best to obstruct that. Before (and for some time after) he ordered preparations for an invasion of Britain, he tried to force the British to consider peace, through political means. On July 19, 1940, he made what was perhaps the most important political speech of his entire career. He offered peace to Britain on these terms: Europe to the Europeans (under German domination, of course) and the British Empire untouched. He spoke for more than two hours. He referred to Germany’s relationship to each of the Great Powers. He did not say a single word about the United States. Indeed, the day before the speech the German Embassy in Washington had been instructed to approach the British ambassador, Lord Lothian, for a meeting arranged by an American intermediary. But the British refused. Here was another coincidence: It was on the day of Hitler's Great Speech that Roosevelt was renominated in Chicago for a third term. Hitler knew what the American presidential election meant. In October he would berate his friend and ally Mussolini for not having waited to start a war with Greece until after it took place.

By the end of July in 1940 Roosevelt had made his first decisive step on the British side. He decided that he could, in his capacity as Commander in Chief, transfer fifty American destroyers to Britain (in exchange for the British ceding some of their western Atlantic and Caribbean bases to the United States). It was at the same moment, on July 31, that Hitler told some of his generals to begin planning for the invasion of the Soviet Union. That was not a mad move by a megalomaniac. The British, Hitler said, had two hopes: America and Russia. Against America he could do nothing. But if Russia was eliminated, his Continental power would be unbeatable. There was more than geopolitical calculation behind that. He was counting on those Americans who would then take some satisfaction in the elimination of Communist Russia, and who would consider the futility of going on with an unwinnable war.

From that moment the duel between Hitler and Churchill across the English Channel evolved into something larger. It became a transatlantic duel of Churchill and Roosevelt against Hitler. Japan now entered into Hitler's calculations. On September 16 he canceled plans for the invasion of Britain that year. Immediately he offered an alliance to the Japanese that the latter took up hastily, and perhaps thoughtlessly. The alliance was meant to keep the United States tied down in the Pacific, compromising Roosevelt's Atlantic actions. It did not work that way. Roosevelt went ahead: with lend-lease, with the draft, with Marines sent to Greenland and Iceland, and with extending the American naval security zone to the middle of the Atlantic. A naval war between Germany and the United States was in the making. But it was still undeclared; and there was the question of what would happen with Russia.

In 1941 the summer solstice divided that crucial year in more than one way. There was a curious symmetry between its two halves. Hitler had already decided to attack Russia. He wanted to entice Stalin to respond to some of his provocations (including not only the massing of German division on the Russian border but German air incursions over the Soviet Union), so that he could claim—as was his practice—that the German attack was an inevitable defense measure. But Stalin did not respond. He was deadly afraid of Germany. He was also very respectful of Hitler. Until the last moment—as a matter of fact, beyond it: For a few hours even after dawn on June 22, when the massive German invasion of his country had begun, he thought, and signaled to Berlin, that there must have been a mistake; he wanted peace and friendship with the Third Reich.

A few hours before his war against Russia was to begin, Hitler gave a peremptory order to German naval forces in the Atlantic. They were rigorously forbidden to fire at American craft, even in self-defense. Thus, while until June 22 Stalin had refused to react to Hitler's provocations, after June 22 Hitler would refuse to respond to Roosevelt's. Hitler knew what Roosevelt wanted: an incident in the Atlantic that would enable the President to go to the Congress with a message of war. He would not give it to him.

Everything changed with Pearl Harbor. It (along with the halt of the German advance on Moscow twenty-four hours earlier) was the turning point of the Second World War. People have argued that it was Hitler's megalomaniac underestimation of America that made him declare war on the United States four days after Pearl Harbor. In reality, he hardly had another choice. He could not plainly betray his Japanese allies by welshing on the alliance that he himself had offered them. Moreover, without knowing exactly what Roosevelt would do, he was well aware that American naval and air warfare in the Atlantic would intensify against him even without a definite proclamation of war. From that point onward Hitler began to regard Roosevelt as his principal enemy. His hatred of Roosevelt grew beyond his hatred of Churchill—and of Stalin, about whom he often spoke with great respect. When his foreign minister called in the American chargé in Berlin, Ribbentrop declared, scowling: "Your President wanted this war."

Churchill and Roosevelt knew that the turning point of the Second World War had come. Hitler knew it too. From that moment on his strategy changed. He knew he could no longer achieve a complete victory (he speculated about that to a small circle of his military advisers on one occasion even before Pearl Harbor). But he would fight tough—so tough that sooner or later that unnatural alliance between America, Britain, and the Soviet Union would break apart. In this respect he had his predecessor Frederick the Great constantly in mind. One hundred and eighty years earlier Frederick, battered and encircled by three enemy powers, won by beating one of them, after which another one suddenly withdrew from the war. He, Hitler, would split his enemies too. In this he was both right and wrong. The Anglo-American-Russian alliance did break apart, but too late for him.

But that took another three and a half years, during which Hitler still paid considerable attention to the United States. In late July 1943, for example, his technicians succeeded in breaking into the transatlantic telephone circuit connecting Roosevelt and Churchill. From their conversation Hitler learned that they were already involved in secret contacts with Italians planning to drop out of the war, which contributed to his decision to move quickly against that. The purpose of Hitler's last desperate offensive, the Battle of the Bulge, in December 1944, was to recapture the port of Antwerp—not Paris—thus inflicting a defeat on the American army closest to Germany and contributing thereby to American war-weariness and to a powerful current of American sentiment of which he was aware: that the war against the Japanese in the Pacific was more popular among the people than the war against the Germans in Europe. Toward the end of the war most Germans knew that they had more to fear from the Russians, and even from the British, than from the Americans. This explains the fact that in the last months German resistance in front of the advancing Americans faded away much more quickly than in front of the Russians. It was evident too in many of the secret contacts that German agents and officials were spinning with American representatives (foremost among them Alien Dulles in Switzerland). These were approved by Heinrich Himmler, not by Adolf Hitler, yet there is no evidence that these were conspiratorial moves conducted against Hitler. Indeed, Hitler wished he had not had to fight the United States. He hated Roosevelt, who, to his mind, was alone responsible for that.

Hitler was living underground in a bunker when Goebbels burst in with news of a miracle: Roosevelt was dead.
Hitler was already ill and depressed, living underground in the Reich Chancellery bunker, when Goebbels burst in at night on April 12, 1945, with the news that Roosevelt was dead. It was Frederick the Great again, Goebbels exclaimed. Back then it had been Frederick's enemy, the Tsarina of Russia, who had dropped dead; it was a miracle; the coalition against Prussia would break up; and now it was Roosevelt. A celebration was in order; Goebbels brought champagne. This episode has often been misconstrued. Hitler had indeed been reading Carlyle's Frederick the Great, but he did not much respond to Goebbels's enthusiasm. (He also disliked champagne.)

Four years earlier his transatlantic enemy had made a decision that contributed greatly to Hitler's defeat. It was Rainbow 1, the strategic war plan adopted by Roosevelt and his military advisers in March 1941. It meant that in case of a two-front war against Germany and Japan, the priority of the American effort would be directed against Germany, after whose defeat the fall of Japan would inevitably follow. It was the right decision strategically. Politically too. Roosevelt's view of Hitler as his main enemy was the principal element of his foreign policy. He was wrong in certain matters: in his belief (going back to his youth and to his assistant secretaryship of the Navy in World War I) that naval power was still the decisive element in history when—at least in Europe—Hitler recognized how motorization had brought about the new ascendancy of power on land, since for the first time in centuries armies could move faster over the ground than by sea. Roosevelt was also wrong in his thoughtless acceptance of the so-called Morgenthau Plan, which called for the dismantling of Germany's industries base; perhaps in his preferred phraseology of "unconditional surrender"; surely in his tendency to postpone (and often even to deny the necessity of) questioning Stalin about the latter's Eastern European plans. But all of this pales in importance before his decisions in 1940. Had the United States had an isolationist President then, Hitler would have won the war.

Not long after Roosevelt’s death the isolationists had their revenge. Let me repeat: The word isolationist may be a misnomer. Most of them soon became advocates of an anti-Communist crusade, domestic and foreign. Underneath the powerful national tide of popular sentiment from which such different men as John Foster Dulles and Joseph McCarthy were to profit, at least for a while, ran a current of opinion to the effect that Roosevelt’s alliances against Germany may have been a mistake, since the Evil Empire of the century was the Soviet Union. The reaction against Roosevelt’s memory led to the Twenty-second Amendment (passed by Congress in 1947, ratified in 1951), prohibiting a future President from serving for more than two terms. It is another irony of history that the only future President so far to be hampered by this was Ronald Reagan, who in the 1980s represented many things that would have been anathema to Franklin Roosevelt. Yet even Ronald Reagan found it politic to pay lip service to the heritage of Franklin Roosevelt. There are not many people in the world who will pay lip service to the heritage of Adolf Hitler. Now that the reunification of a divided Germany (whose division Hitler’s war had brought about) has come, there is another ironical circumstance worth considering. Toward the end of the war Hitler said that he was “Europe’s last chance,” for if Germany were to be defeated, the weakness and the corruption of liberal democracy would inevitably lead to the triumph of Communism. What is happening in Europe now is a living denial of the vitality of Communism—but also of the validity of the ideology of an anticommunism that has been so often and so wrongly equated with traditional patriotism, which had helped Hitler into power and with the help of which he had tried to divide the West and even the American people. Thanks, at least in part, to Franklin Roosevelt, he failed.

John Lukacs’s article “Connecting With Eastern Europe,” in the November 1990 issue, won the Olive Branch Award “for journalistic excellence in reporting and commenting on issues pertaining to East-West relations and the security of the planet.”

Fascism, Nazism and Conservatism, the ties that bind:"the Left" were the people who were beaten and murdered in the 1920s by the squadristi and the Brownshirts; and the first Germans sent off to Nazi concentration camps like Dachau were not Jews but socialists, communists, and other left-wing political prisoners, including "liberal" priests and clerics.

Without their revisionist lies, today's extreme radical kooky right has nothing.
Fascism, Nazism and Conservatism
European fascism drew on existing anti-modernist conservatism, and on the conservative reaction to communism and 19th-century socialism. Conservative thinkers such as historian Oswald Spengler provided much of the world view (Weltanschauung) of the Nazi movement.

In Britain, the conservative Daily Mail enthusiastically backed Sir Oswald Mosley's British Union of Fascists, and part of the Conservative Party supported closer ties with Nazi Germany.
When defeat in World War II ideologically and historically discredited fascism, almost all Western conservatives tried to distance themselves from it. Nevertheless, many post-war Western conservatives continued to admire the Franco regime in Spain, clearly conservative but also fascist in origin. With the end of the Franco regime and Portugal's Estado Novo in the 1970s, the relationship between conservatism and classical European fascism was further weakened.
Militarism is perhaps the most striking similarity between Fascism and contemporary American conservatism. Of course, there are many liberals in America who support the military and even call for increased military spending.
Even so, American liberals are traditionally more skeptical of the military than American conservatives. It is often said that Neoconservatives, like Hitler, see the military as a paradigm for problem solving (even in situations that may render militarism impractical or unethical).
The relationship of fascism to right-wing ideologies (including some that are described as neo-fascist) is still an issue for conservatives and their opponents. Especially in Germany, there is a constant exchange of ideology and persons, between the influential national-conservative movement, and self-identified national-socialist groups. In Italy too, there is no clear line between conservatives, and movements inspired by the Italian Fascism of the 1920s to 1940s, including the Alleanza Nazionale which is member of the governing coalition under premier Silvio Berlusconi. Conservative attitudes to the 20th-century fascist regimes are still an issue.
Under an ideological definition of Socialism, for example one stating that only a system adhering to the principles of Marxism can qualify as socialist there is a well-defined gap between Nazism and socialism. Nazi leaders were opposed to the Marxist idea of class conflict and opposed the idea that capitalism should be abolished and that workers should control the means of production. For those who consider class conflict and the abolition of capitalism as essential components of socialism, these factors alone are sufficient to categorize "National Socialism" as non-socialist.
---------- The 2000 book, Right-Wing Populism in America, details its history from Bacon's Rebellion to the Ku Klux Klan to the modern-day Posse Comitatus and militia/Patriot movements. What distinguishes these populists from their left-wing counterparts, as Berlet explains, is that "they combine attacks on socially oppressed groups with grassroots mass mobilization and distorted forms of antielitism based on scapegoating." Other notorious right wing figures in 20th century history include Father Charles Coughlin, the rabid anti-Semitic radio talker of the 1930s, and Sen. Joe McCarthy.

Beyond the Klan, there were the Silver Shirts, the American Nazi Party, the Posse Comitatus, the Aryan Nations, or the National Alliance -- all of them openly right wing fascist organizations, many of them involved in some of the nation's most horrific historical events. (The Oklahoma City bombing, for instance), then there was William Dudley Pelley, Gerald L.K.Smith, George Lincoln Rockwell, William Potter Gale, Richard Butler, and David Duke -- all of them bona fide right wing racists and fascists.
"the Left" were the people who were beaten and murdered in the 1920s by the squadristi and the Brownshirts; and the first Germans sent off to Nazi concentration camps like Dachau were not Jews but socialists, communists, and other left-wing political prisoners, including "liberal" priests and clerics.
Then why did the Nazis HATE Marxism, Communism, and Socialism? Just how uneducated do you Conservative propagandists assume we are? Everybody knows the Nazis were right wingers.
From "World Book Encyclopedia", 1958, p. 5467: The name National Socialist German Workers Party does not correctly describe the Nazi movement. It was neither socialist nor organized for the benefit of workers. The name was apparently developed in an effort to win the support of the working classes.... Nazism was only a part of of the broad social movement known as Fascism which gained millions of supporters in many countries during the 1930's.... The industrialists gave financial support to the party because they thought the Nazis would protect them from from socialism and communism, and from the increasing strength of the labor unions. End Quotes.

The morinic reactionary radical rightist Republicans probably believe that since they think both FDR and Hitler were soicalists that they were in cahoots,instead of Republicans like Henry Ford and Prescott Bush cozing up to Der Fueher and doing business with him, while opposing US intervention in WW2 to fight Nazisim.

Hitler, With His Love Of The Wealthy and Hatred For Jews, Socialists, Unionists, Homosexuals, Romani, Blacks, The Physically And Mentally Disabled

Etc. Would Have Made A Fine Republican

Nazism advocated the supremacy of an Aryan master race over all other races. Nazis viewed the progress of humanity as depending on the Aryans and believed that it could maintain its dominance only if it retained its purity and instinct for self-preservation. They claimed that Jews were the greatest threat to the Aryan race. They considered Jews a parasitic race that attached itself to various ideologies and movements to secure its self -preservation, such as capitalism, democracy, the Enlightenment, industrialisation, liberalism, Marxism, parliamentary politics, and trade unionism.

To maintain the purity and strength of the Aryan race, the Nazis sought to exterminate or impose exclusionary segregation upon "degenerate" and "asocial" groups that included: Jews, homosexuals, Romani, blacks, the physically and mentally disabled, Jehovah's Witnesses and political opponents.

Nazism promoted an economic system that supported a stratified economy with classes based on merit and talent while rejecting egalitarianism, retaining private property, freedom of contract, and promoted the creation of national solidarity that would transcend class distinction. It promoted the creation of a community of common interest between managers and employees in industry where a factory leader would be selected to act in coordination with a council of factory members, though these members would have to obey the F&#65533;hrerprinzip of the factory leader. The economy was to be subordinate to the goals of the political leadership of the state.

The Encyclopedia Britannica defines conservatism as “a preference for the historically inherited rather than the abstract and ideal,” explaining that “conservatives prefer institutions and practices that have evolved gradually and are manifestations of continuity and stability.” But without a historical, political, and cultural frame of reference, this definition tells us little about the principles that conservatism upholds. The established traditions of different cultures vary greatly, and thus “conservatism” means something unique in each culture. As the author and syndicated columnist Jonah Goldberg has pointed out:

“To say a conservative is someone who wishes to conserve is technically correct but practically useless. 'Liberals' these days are in many respects more conservative than 'conservatives.' American conservatives want to change all sorts of things, while liberals are keen on keeping the status quo (at least until they get into power). The most doctrinaire Communists in the Soviet Politburo were routinely called 'conservatives' by Kremlinologists.”

To be conservative within a revolutionary tradition simply means to conserve the paradigm peculiar to that revolution. In the United States, the libertarian ethos of the American Revolution inspired a tradition based on individual rights, free markets and democratic constitutions. To be conservative, or on the “right,” in the context of the democratic West means to preserve the classical liberal, individualist and free-market framework that is its historic achievement. Among the highest values of this framework are:

-individual rights and freedoms (as opposed to group rights, group privileges, and group-identity politics [i.e. Socialism-NAZI]);

-the rule of law (as opposed to the rule of men [i.e. Socialism-NAZI], as manifested in judicial activism and the view that the Constitution is a "living," and therefore infinitely malleable, document);

-private property (as opposed to the communality of property that is apportioned "equitably" by a central government [I.E. Socialism-NAZI]);

-free markets (as opposed to an economy that is managed and controlled by bureaucrats); and

-limited government (as opposed to a massive, omnipotent government that micromanages virtually all aspects of people's lives [I.E. Socialism-NAZI]).

Jonah Goldberg expands upon this theme:

“[A] conservative in America is a liberal in the classical sense — because the institutions conservatives seek to preserve are liberal institutions. This is why Hayek [http://mises.org/page/1454/Biography-of-F-A-Hayek-18991992] explicitly exempted American conservatism from his essay 'Why I am Not a Conservative.' The conservatives he disliked were mostly continental thinkers who liked the marriage of Church and State, hereditary aristocracies, overly clever cheese, and the rest. The conservatives he liked were Burke, the American founders, Locke et al.”

Conservatism (in its current sense as a phenomenon in Western culture) denies the perfectibility of humanity; it rejects the optimistic notion that human beings can be morally improved through social and political change. Unlike the French Enlightenment philosopher Jean-Jacques Rousseau, who characterized the political institutions of his day as “chains” hindering man’s expression of his natural goodness, conservatism assumes that human beings are naturally flawed; that they are prone to such vices as selfishness, anarchy, irrationality, and violence; and that to curb the base and destructive instincts that are part and parcel of the human condition, we must rely upon traditional political and cultural institutions -- without whose restraining power there could be no ethical behavior and no responsible use of liberty.

This brand of conservatism began to develop as a distinct political attitude and movement in the late eighteenth century, in reaction to the upheavals caused by the French Revolution. The term “conservative” was coined in France after 1815 by supporters of the newly restored Bourbon monarchy. Fifteen years thereafter, the British politician and writer John Wilson Croker used the term to describe the British

Tory Party. John Calhoun, a staunch defender of states' rights in the United States, used the term in the 1830s.

The recognized father of modern conservatism (though he never used the term himself) is the British parliamentarian and political writer Edmund Burke, whose 1790 treatise Reflections on the Revolution in France rejected the violent, untraditional methods of the French Revolution. But Burke was not opposed to social change as a matter of unwavering principle. Indeed, he supported the American Revolution (1775–83), which he considered a justified defense of traditional liberties against King George III's tyranny.

Yep Gun Show here at TD Center this wekeend, too. Wish I had some spare $$$$ so I could go stock up on some cheap 9mm reloads to burn at the indoor range. But alas I have no spare $$$ so I'll hafta stick to free entertainment.

I tell you what's free ...

Listening to The Great Liberty Nit-Wit-Net. Every week you get a fresh new perspective on current events.

Obama's a crook.
Clinton's a crook.
Bush is a crook.
Biden's a crook.
They're all crooks.

And now the bad news .. there is no proclaimer.

So there will be literally billions and billions of shortwave listeners worldwide who will not know where or when to tune in.

Yep they talk about him every week on The Great Liberty Nit-Wit-Net.
It usually goes like this:

Obama's a crook.
Clinton's a crook.
Bush is a crook.
Biden's a crook.
They're all crooks.

It just never gets old.

And now it's gonna fade from SWL history because the Proclaimer has gone AWOL and refuses to return to his assigned responsiblility.

Sad days, indeed.

Liberty Net: March 24, 2012

http://3950.net/2012/03/liberty-net-march-24-2012/

by Kevin Strom, WB4AIO

WHEN THE LIBERTY NET begins, people listen ï¿½ on 75 meters direct, or via N2IRJï¿½s ï¿½ or N2SAGï¿½s ï¿½ or my receiver on one of the netï¿½s live feed pages. Although most listeners and participants are in the US, the net has an international reach and reputation.

Here are some of the issues discussed and debated during this weekï¿½s Liberty Net:

ï¿½ Greg Smith, an account executive with Goldman Sachs, recently resigned and published an open letter confessing the unbelievably crooked practices of his former firm ï¿½ typical of the bankers, who feed like vultures on the rest of us. (3 minutes)

ï¿½ On March 16, the Washington regime issued an outrageously unconstitutional ï¿½Executive Orderï¿½ claiming the power to seize anyoneï¿½s property at any time, with no reason being given. (6 minutes)

ï¿½ The ease with which ethnic and racial communities became polarized over the Trayvon Martin case is just more proof that human beings are essentially tribal, and naturally support and cleave to those who are most genetically related to themselves. Denying this and believing in a fictitious ï¿½equalityï¿½ just leads to more misery. One of the biggest deceptions in this affair is the repeated media claim that alleged shooter Zimmerman is White when he clearly is not. (13 minutes)

ï¿½ The bankers who misrule Britain have now re-instituted their infamous ï¿½perpetual bondsï¿½ in which all the usurersï¿½ dreams come true: They need not and indeed cannot ever be paid back, and the ï¿½borrowerï¿½ must pay interest forever. (37 minutes)

ï¿½ Why all the media brouhaha about Trayvon Martin, when in the very same week two horrific Black-on-White crimes happened in nearby areas and got almost no air time? (57 minutes)

ï¿½ The arrogance of the ï¿½Americanï¿½ authorities knows no bounds: The regime in Washington now claims that it can shut down any Web site whatsoever, even if it is registered and operated from a foreign country. They justify this with the unbelievably thin justification, among others, that even foreign virtual cloud servers might have an occasional bit routed through the US for a few milliseconds, thereby

ï¿½ they claim ï¿½ giving jurisdiction to the Washington regime. (1 hour 26 minutes)

ï¿½ When three White students in Ohio were killed by a maniac, why did the media masters and Obama make no national statement of any kind? (1 hour 45 minutes)

ï¿½ Why has the regimeï¿½s Department of Homeland Security bought out almost the entire extant supply of several calibers of firearm ammunition? Who are they planning to shoot? And where do they get the authority to shoot anyone? (1 hour 50 minutes)

Thanks to Marty, N2IRJ, youï¿½re able to listen to these Liberty Net recordings at home, at work, in your car, or while hiking or jogging with your portable mp3 player. And remember the live feeds during Net times that let you hear the Liberty Net via multiple receivers ï¿½ and have a real-time discussion too.

Remember that all our Internet adjuncts are intended just to enhance the real purpose of the net, which is live and free communication between amateur operators. So please check in to the Liberty Net every Saturday night, usually to be found somewhere in that part of 75 meters above 3950 kHz ï¿½ we have to be flexible to evade jammers and intruders ï¿½ starting at 10PM Eastern Time. Once heard, the sound of W1WCRï¿½s distinctive and powerful signal is unmistakable and youï¿½ll have no trouble finding us and checking in.

Kudos and thanks go to Vic, W1WCR, for his decades of hard work for free speech and amateur radio, and to all of you for checking in!

then you must agree with these statements correct?
"We must take from state authority those functions for which it is incompetent and which it performs badly... I believe the state should renounce its economic functions, especially those carried out through monopolies, because the state is incompetent in such matters... We must put an end to state railways, state postal service and state

Frequencies are in kHz. Usual spacing in shortwave broadcast bands is 5 kHz. Frequencies above 10000 kHz tend to propagate better during the day; frequencies below 10000 kHz tend to propagate better at night.
